The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as the most stately, ruins in Ayrshire. It is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I., David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion. They held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunninghame. There likewise exist the extensive ruins of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawfurd, of Kilbirnie. At the present time, the estates of Kilbirnie are principally possessed by the Knox family. The parish church is a plain edifice, possessing no architectural features of importance. The chief interest attaching to the building is found in the elaborate carvings in wood with which portions of its interior are ornamented. The gallery in the Crawfurd aisle, in particular, is a perfect mass of beautiful carved work, reflecting great credit on the artist who designed it. It is supposed to have been executed by the orders of John, first Viscount Garnock, the escutcheon of whose arms, impaled with those of his wife Margaret (only daughter of John, first Earl of Bute), accompanied by sixteen other coats of arms, being those of his ancestors in the fourth degree, appear along its front. The gallery had been allowed to fall into a state of neglect and decay; but recently Mr. James Knox, the owner of Kilbirnie Castle, had it thoroughly restored in excellent taste, by Mr. John Pollock, Victoria Cabinet Works, Beith, and it is now likely to remain an ornament to the church for many years. The most interesting object in the church yard is the stately tomb which forms the last resting-place of the gallant Captain Thomas Crawfurd, of Jordanhill, whose capture of Dumbarton Castle, in 1571, is one of the most daring feats recorded in history. Congregations of the Free Church, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics have likewise their respective temples for worship. A new cemetery, covering two acres, has been added to the town, at a cost of £900. The parish of Kilbirnie comprises 10,335 acres, and had, in 1871, a population of 4,953 persons, and in 1881, 5,248; of this number the village contained 3,405.

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CROOKEDHOLM, CROSS HOUSE, RICCARTON, HURLFORD, KILMAURS, FENWICK (OR FINNICK—HIGH AND LOW), CRAIGIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMARNOCK is a large and important manufacturing town in the parish of that name and district of Cunninghame, 65½ miles S.W. of Edinburgh (through Glasgow), 21 S.W. from Glasgow, 12 N. by E. from Ayr, and between six and seven E. by N. from Irvine; situated on level ground near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The chief advantages of the place as a site for manufactures was the presence of coal, and for many years it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of Scotch bonnets and military caps. In 1731 the population had so increased that a new parish, the High Church, was formed. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent. The leading kinds are two-ply, three-ply and Brussels. A Kilmarnock mechanic had the honour of being the discoverer of the three-ply carpets; they excel the two-ply in design, colour, and durability. Steam is now used by most firms for the weaving of two-ply and Brussels. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation. Formerly skin works and tanneries were common in Kilmarnock, but at the present time there is only one of each. Of late years an extensive trade in the manufacture of tweeds and winceys has been developed, and woollen and worsted spinning is also carried on. The iron trade may now be said to be the staple trade of the town, and there are many large machine making and iron founding establishments. The most extensive of these are the Caledonian Works, carried on by Messrs. Andrew Barclay, Son & Co.; the Glenfield; the Vulcan, Messrs. M'Culloch; the Townholm, Messrs. Grant, Ritchie & Co.; and others. The Townholm Forge, carried on by Messrs. M. Reid & Co. is famous for the size and excellence of its forgings. The wages paid in this branch of manufacture alone amount to several thousand pounds weekly. Shawl printing was formerly the most important department of manufacture. It has almost disappeared, and there are now only two small works engaged in it. The manufacture of cotton and other goods by steam power has been in operation for some years, and gives employment to several hundred females. There is also a large establishment for the manufacture of a patented water meter, invented by an ingenious townsman, Mr. Thomas Kennedy. The importance of Kilmarnock has been much increased by a large engineering establishment in connection with the Glasgow and South-Western railway, for the manufacture and repair of locomotive engines, carriages and other apparatus. The banking establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the British Linen Company, together with a local bank for savings, apart from the one in connection with the post office. Surrounding the town are extensive coal fields, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies being transmitted continually by railway to Ardrossan, Ayr, Troon, and Irvine, where it is shipped to various places.

The civil government is vested in a provost, six bailies, and eighteen councillors. The magistrates preside in the criminal court by turns, and the justices sit monthly. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Rutherglen in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Stephen Williamson, Esq. Viscountess Ossington is the principal owner of Kilmarnock and its neighbouring lands. Few towns can boast of a larger and finer cross, where no fewer than seven streets converge. The are regularly laid out, and the greater part of the houses are built of stone. The opening up of such new streets as John Finnie street, in which is the new and commodious post office, Duke street, and John Dickie street, have done much to improve the general appearance of the town, as well to promote sanitary purposes. The Liberals and Conservatives have each a club house, the former being situated in John Finnie street, whilst that of the latter, a new erection, is in Sturrock street. This is a fine stone building in the Italian style of architecture, and consists of a spacious hall, to accommodate 400 people, and billiard, reading and recreation rooms. Members are admitted to full use of the rooms for the small sum of one shilling per year. The building was erected by public subscription at a cost of about £1,400; Mr. R. S. Ingram being the architect, and Mr. James Wallace the builder. The suburbs on the east, south, and west sides contain many handsome villas, occupied by business men or retired merchants. The Town House, built in 1805, contains a court room for the magistracy, and public offices. The Court House in St. Marnock street, erected in 1852, is an elegant structure, attached to which are the sheriff's chambers and the offices of the procurator fiscal. The Corn Exchange buildings comprise a large public hall, erected by an influential joint-stock company. At the junction of John Finnie and John Dickie streets is a range of buildings, belonging to and occupied by the Kilmarnock Equitable Co-operative Society, and built at a cost of £6,000. The Kilmarnock Academy is a handsome and commodious structure, worthy of the town and highly creditable to the architect, Mr. William Railton. It is built of red sandstone, in the Gothic style of architecture of the Elizabethan period, and is designed to accommodate 600 pupils, boys and girls, where they are taught various branches of education by able masters; Mr. Hugh Dickie, B.A. is the rector. It was erected by the burgh School Board, at a cost of £5,000, and was opened in June, 1876. There are also two well-built and commodious elementary schools in High street and Low Glencairn street, also erected by the School Board. What was formerly the Free school has been converted by the Board into a Grammar school, and the Female Industrial school is now an elementary school of the Board. There are also several private schools, of a high character. In addition to these are Kay's Endowed schools, in Wellington street and Bentinck street, founded by Alexander Kay, a native of Kilmarnock, who left the sum of £6,000 for their building and endowment. These schools have, by the Endowment Commissioners' scheme, been sold to the School Board, and the interest of the proceeds applied to educational purposes. Two School Boards have been elected here—the Burgh School Board and the Landward School Board, and all public schools within the burgh are under the supervision of the former, and those outside the boundaries of the burgh under the latter. The institutions likewise comprise some well conducted societies. The most important is the Kilmarnock Library, founded in 1797. At present, including the Shaw and Philosophical libraries now amalgamated with it, there are 7,328 separate works, with upwards of 20,000 volumes. By a bequest from the late Mr. Crawford, bookseller, a free income of fully £100 annually has become available for the purchase of books. The Philosophical Society was formed in 1828, for the promotion of general and specially scientific knowledge. There is an excellent reading room in the Ossington Coffee House, built by Lady Ossington. This room is liberally supplied with newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals. Another institution worthy of notice is the Kilmarnock Philharmonic Society. Besides these, there are located here four masonic lodges, a society of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, one of the Free Foresters, one of the Free Gardeners, and others. An object of interest in this town is the Observatory, erected in 1818, by the late Mr. Thomas Morton, at an expense of £1,000. The Observatory, which is 70 feet in height, and furnished with valuable telescopes and other apparatus, stands on a fine site, and commands a delightful view of the surrounding country as far as the Firth of Clyde. Mr. Morton obtained considerable celebrity for his mechanical genius, and in 1835 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1848 was inaugurated in the market cross a beautiful monument to the memory of Sir James Shaw, Bart., late Lord Mayor of London, who was a native of Mosshead, in this neighbourhood, where he was born in 1764, and died on the 22nd October, 1843. The statue of the deceased, by Fillans, is eight feet in height, mounted on a pedestal of the same altitude. The former, which is cut out of a solid block of marble, weighing ten tons, represents him in his civic decoration as lord mayor, and is altogether a very fine production of art.

The Kay Park owes its existence to the late Alexander Kay, insurance broker, Glasgow, a native of Kilmarnock, who died in January, 1866. By his will, besides £6,000 for the building and endowment of two elementary schools for the children of industrious poor, he left £10,000 to purchase grounds for a public park and to maintain the same. After several attempts to obtain suitable ground, the trustees gave up their endeavours, and the money was allowed to accumulate. In 1878 the late Duke of Portland intimated his willingness to deal with the trustees for the purchase of ground for a public park, whose capital was then about £13,000. After negotiations, the present site of the park was fixed, which consists of nearly forty acres. The cost of the ground alone was £9,000. It includes the Clerk's Holm, and stretches from Braehead House to the Townhead bridge, and from the river on the west to Grassyards road on the east. Nearly a fourth of it is reserved as feuing ground. A large portion of the money was spent in laying out the park, and forming drives and walks, so that when the trustees handed it over to the council little more than £1,000 remained as a fund to maintain it. In the centre of the Clerk's Holm is an ornamental fountain, the gift of the late Mrs. Crooks, which cost £800. In the same place a band-stand has been erected, for music on Saturday afternoons. On August 9th, 1879, the park was publicly handed over to the council, in behoof of the town, by the trustees, the council undertaking, if necessary, to provide £100 yearly. In 1882 the town council purchased Strawberry Bank, an adjoining property, consisting of eight acres, for £1,800, which has been incorporated with the Kay Park. A portion is reserved for feuing purposes, and a small ornamental lake is formed on the south-east of the ground. In connection with Kay Park may be noticed the Burns' Monument, said to be one of the finest to the memory of the Bard in Scotland. The monument was originated at the public anniversary of Burns, held on January 26th, 1877, when a proposal to erect a statue in honour of the poet was agreed to, and a committee appointed to carry out the project. In a short time £1,000 was subscribed, and this before long was doubled. Instead of a simple statue, the committee found they could erect a monument and statue therein. By the kindness of the Kay Trustees a site for the monument was granted in a most eligible situation in the park. The erection is in the Scottish baronial style, from a design by Mr. Ingram, architect, Kilmarnock, and has a height of 80 feet. It overlooks the whole town, and commands one of the finest possible views. The memorial stone was laid with masonic honours on September 14th, 1878, and on August 9th, 1879, the whole was completed. The statue, which is of Sicilian marble, was executed by Mr. W. G. Stevenson, Edinburgh, and cost £800. It is reckoned an excellent likeness of the poet. R. W. Cochran-Patrick, Esq., M.P. for North Ayrshire, laid the memorial stone, and Major-General C. Alexander, M.P. for South Ayrshire, unveiled the statue, which is placed in an alcove at the top of the entrance stair. The entire cost of the building and statue was about £2,700, the whole being raised by subscription, and both were handed over to the council for the community free of debt. Part of the building is used as a Burns' and Archæological Museum. The collection of Burns' holograph MSS. in this monument is the most complete in existence, and more may be seen by single visit to it than in all other Burns' collections put together. It includes the MSS. of "Tam o' Shanter," "Cottar's Saturday Night," "The Twa Dogs," "The Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer," "Address to the Deil," "Winter: a dirge," "Auld Farmer's address to his Mare," "Hallow'een," "Holy Fair," "John Barleycorn," "Man was made to Mourn," "Address to James Smith," "Epistle to Davie, a brither poet," "Death of Puir Mailie," "Puir Mailie's Elegy," "Scotch Drink," "Last May a braw Wooer," "Holy Willie's Prayer," "Lassie wi' the lint White Locks," &c., and many letters from Burns to his correspondents in Kilmarnock and neighbourhood. There is also the Mackie Library, which contains almost every published edition of the poet (including the first Kilmarnock edition, 1786), comprising upwards of 800 volumes.

The Buchanan Bequest is the most important charitable institution. In 1875 the last survivor of the Misses Buchanan, of Bellfield, died, and according to settlement made by the three sisters the estate of Bellfield and mansion was gifted to the town of Kilmarnock and the village of Riccarton, close to which the estate, which consists of 240 acres, is situated. The following digest of the trust deed fully explains its nature. The lands and estate of Bellfield and the minerals were to be held by trustees till Martinmas, 1885, and the trust called the Buchanan Bequest. The annual proceeds are to defray expenses of the bequest, to pay yearly at Martinmas £5 to the Certified Industrial School; £3 to Kilmarnock Infirmary; £10 to the parish minister of Riccarton, to be expended on flannel for deserving poor; £130 yearly as salary to a missionary for Riccarton parish, and the balance of the yearly rents from lands and minerals to accumulate. As soon as convenient, part of the mansion to be fitted up as a library, and open for consultation and reference only to the public of Kilmarnock and Riccarton, and the gardens and policies to be open for recreation. Out of the accumulated funds, and before ten years, the rest of the mansion to be fitted up as an asylum for aged and infirm people, not on the poor roll, who are to be sixty years old and upwards, or younger if rendered unable by accident to provide for themselves, and resident for ten years in Kilmarnock or Riccarton parish. The inmates are to be clothed and fed, and all charges paid out of the rents; but a sum must be available yearly for equal division between Kilmarnock and Riccarton for charitable purposes. The trustees have power to abandon the asylum part of the bequest, should they think the revenues not sufficient, and they have decided to do so. The balance remaining for division between the parishes of Kilmarnock and Riccarton for the year ending 10th November, 1887, was £374 12s. 6d. At the end of ten years all the estate and funds are to be transferred to the provost and magistrates of Kilmarnock, the Established Church clergymen of the town, the minister of Riccarton and the trustees under the settlement, who shall thereafter administer the trust, and shall be the trustees. The mansion and grounds have been open to the public since shortly after the bequest, every week day, and part of Sunday. The minerals have been let, and are being worked, and the funds have been accumulating. It is calculated that from ten to twenty aged persons will find refuge in the house, should it be opened. The library contains 1,500 volumes. The place is much visited during the summer.

The civil parish of Kilmarnock consists ecclesiastically of four parishes—the Low, the High, St. Marnock's, and St. Andrew's, each containing an Established church. Part of the original, or Low church, is of great antiquity. St. Marnock's church, erected at a cost of £5,000, is a large handsome edifice, seated for 1,700 persons, and ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower. The Free Church has six places of worship in the town, and a seventh in the village of Crookedholm, in the parish. The United Presbyterians have also four churches in the town. Their church in King street is very neatly designed, and has a singularly elegant spire, forming a conspicuous object in the scenery of the town. There are also chapels for the Original Seceders, the Evangelical Union, the Scottish Episcopalians, and the Roman Catholics, besides places of worship for other denominations. The old parish church yard and that of St. Andrew's are now closed, but a public cemetery, covering seven acres of ground, was opened in 1875.

The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean Castle, formerly the property of the Boyds, Earls of Kilmarnock. It stands in a "dean," or hollow, less than a mile north from the town. It was burnt down in 1735. When in a perfect state it was considered capable of sustaining a long siege, as, according to tradition, it had the means of drawing secret supplies through subterranean ways that communicated with Crawfurdland Castle, two miles distant. A portion of this castle dates from 1066. Kilmarnock House, another edifice once belonging to and the last residence of that noble family, is situated in St. Marnock street. From this house proceeded the last unfortunate earl, in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. This building is now occupied as an industrial school. About three miles from the town, beautifully situated on the Carmel, is Rowallan Castle, which is of considerable antiquity, though the oldest portions are greatly decayed. It was the seat of the barons of Rowallan, and is famous as being the birthplace of Elizabeth More, or Mure, the first wife of Robert the Second of Scotland, who lived and died, tradition says, at Dundonald Castle. It was also the residence of Sir William Mure, author of a metrical translation of the Psalms of David, and other poetical works. The Rowallan estate has passed by marriage into the Hastings, or Loudoun, family, whose residence is near Galston. Among the residences of the gentry may be named The Mount, the property of Lady Oranmore; Caprington Castle, Annanhill House, and others. The Fever Hospital and Dispensary, a stone building, situated on an elevated site, was opened in 1868, the cost of its erection being £4,146.

The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption. Fairs are held the second Tuesday in May, last Thursday in July (commonly called the "gooseberry fair"), and the last Thursday in October, for horses. The cheese show and fair, held at the end of October, is affirmed to be the largest in the kingdom, and is attended by dealers from all parts of the country. It was calculated that at the show and fair held in 1884, fully 15,000 tons of cheese were represented at it. The October show is purely an agricultural one. About the middle of April a large show of cattle has been held for years. It ranks next to the great Ayr show. The acreage of the parish of Kilmarnock is about 9,552. As showing the progress of the town, it may be mentioned that in 1801 the population of the parish was 8,079, and in 1884, 25,864. The burgh proper in that year numbered 23,910, and the Parliamentary burgh, including Riccarton, 25,841.

The parish of Riccarton is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river, which separates it from Kilmarnock. It contains about 7,600 acres. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length by between two and three in breadth, and includes the village of Hurlford, at which latter place is situated the extensive works of the Eglinton Iron Co., also a large manufactory for fire-clay articles, belonging to Messrs. J. & R. Howie, and several extensive collieries. A very handsome Established church and a Free church have also been erected in the immediate neighbourhood, but in Kilmarnock parish; and a large subscription school was built for the education of the children of the working class, but is now one of the public schools of the parish. There is a sub-post office here. The village of Riccarton is remarkable for having been the residence of the venerable Sir Rowland Crawford, the maternal uncle of Wallace, with whom the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. The church of Riccarton is a comparatively modern structure, having been erected in 1823; it has a fine lofty steeple, and, from its elevated position, has an ornamental effect on the country round. An excellent bridge across the Irvine materially improves the approach from Ayr to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish. The principal landed proprietors are W. C. S. Cuninghame, Esq., J.P., of Caprington, the Duke of Portland, and Captain Tufnell, R.N. Acreage, 7,550. In 1881 the parish contained 7,112 persons.

Kilmaurs is a parish in the district of Cunninghame, with an acreage of 5,900. The town, a small one and a burgh of barony, is two miles from Kilmarnock, situated on the right bank of a rivulet called Kilmaurs or Carmel water. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James V., at the instance of Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the portioners), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town house, with a steeple and clock. There is a sub-post and money order office here. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of clasp-knives or whittles, the sharpness of the edge of which instrument gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison; a man of acute understanding and quickness of action is said to be "as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle." The most prominent trade now is the manufacture of boots and shoe, and the factory of Messrs. Kellie & M'Leish give employment to a number of hands. Coals are raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. Communication with all parts of the country is afforded by the Glasgow, Barrhead and Kilmarnock Joint Railway line, which has a station here. There is an old pile of buildings near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin, but with respect to its founder or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculptor, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor William, the ninth earl. The Established church has lately undergone a thorough restoration, which includes new chancel and tower and internal renovation, but in structure the old character of the edifice has been maintained. The cost, amounting to about £3,000, was defrayed jointly by the heritors and members of the congregation. Mr. R. S. Ingram, of Kilmarnock, was the architect, and the building contract was carried out by Messrs. W. Maclachlan & Son, of Irvine. There are also a Free church and a United Presbyterian church, and ample means of education are afforded the children of the inhabitants by the burgh school and a parochial school, now under the supervision of a School Board. The market, which was for a long period held on Thursday, has fallen into disuse; but fairs are still maintained on the 11th of June, and on the third Wednesday in that month, and the 11th of November. Population of the parish in 1881, 3,704; of the village, 1,203.

Fenwick or Finnick, is a parish in the district of Cunninghame, about nine miles in length by six in breadth, containing 18,104 acres. The Kirktown is cheerfully situated about four miles N. by E. from Kilmarnock, on the banks of the Merhenock stream, on the road to Glasgow. There is another village, sometimes called Rose Fenwick, on the same road, about a quarter of a mile S. from Kirktown. At a former period the district was chiefly moorland; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater portion of the parish is now under cultivation, and the village possesses the advantage of a sub-post and money order office. Guthrie, a noted champion of the Covenant before the Reformation, was the first minister of this parish. He was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of the "fool of Finnick," an appellation which even appeared on the title pages of his published sermons. Guthrie is said to have held conventicles in the Castle of Rowallan, the residence of Sir William Mure (who suffered severely by fines and imprisonment for his attachment to the Presbyterian cause), after he was ejected from the church in 1664. John Howie, who chronicled the sufferings of the martyrs and confessors of the Covenant, was tenant of the moorland farm of Lochgoin, in this parish, and his descendants still continue to occupy it. Many memorials of the Covenanters are preserved in this sequestered farmhouse, including the bible and sword of Captain Paton, the flag of the Phinick Covenanters used at Drumclog, &c. The old castle of Polkellie, at Polkellie Hall, was the residence of Robert Mure, of Polkellie, &c., Lord Provost of Edinburgh, whose wife was the first person in the district who was prosecuted for heresy, in 1494. This parish was originally a part of Kilmarnock, from which it was disjoined in 1641. The church was built on the lands of Finnich (Gaelic) or Finnick which became the name of the parish. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for a United Presbyterian congregation. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May and the first Tuesday in November. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,152; of the village, 366.

CRAIGIE, is a small postal village, about four miles S. from Kilmarnock, and possesses a church and a school. It is situated on an elevation, about 400 feet above the sea, and commands a pleasant view of the surrounding country and the sea. The old castle of Craigie, now in ruins, was long the residence of the Wallaces, of Craigie and Riccarton. The immortal Scottish patriot Sir William Wallace was descended from a younger branch of this family. The parish, which is purely agricultural, and has an area of 6,576 acres, is about eight miles in length by two in breadth. Population in 1881, 590.

KILWINNING

IS a parish, post and market town, the former containing 10,989 acres, in the district of Cunninghame. The town, a thriving one, and of considerable extent, is 24 miles S.S.W. from Glasgow, 3 N.W. of Irvine, 4 N.E. of Saltcoats, the same distance S. of Dalry, 10 W N.W. of Kilmarnock, and 5 E. from Ardrossan, on the Glasgow and South-Western line of railway. A new branch of the Lanarkshire and Ayrshire Railway, from Barmill to Ardrossan, was opened in the summer of 1888, the station being close to that on the Glasgow and South-Western line. Kilwinning is situated on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached by excellent roads, passing through a highly cultivated agricultural district. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c., was till lately carried on to an important extent or the Glasgow and Paisley markets. There are large iron, coal, and fire-clay works in the neighbourhood, and in the town are branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. Several engineering works, an iron foundry, and a worsted spinning mill are carried on in a spirited manner. The agricultural produce of the parish is considerable, and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. A public park, for which £7,000 was bequeathed by the late John M'Gavin, Esq., formerly of this town, has been opened for some years. Besides the Established and Free churches, there are chapels belonging to the Evangelical Union, Original Seceders, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The only remarkable objects are the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey, founded by Hugh de Morville, in 1140, and the beautiful tower of the church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance. This tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2,000, raised by subscription, to which the Earl of Eglinton was a liberal contributor. The present Earl has a fine mansion in the neighbourhood, called Eglinton Castle. In addition to the numerous schools in the locality, there is a very handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, at a cost of £8,700, to accommodate about 800 children. Kilwinning was the place in Scotland where freemasonry was first established; it was said to have been introduced by the foreign architect who was employed in erecting the abbey. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable from being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and a respectable society of that kind is still in existence. Fairs are held on the first Monday in February and the first Monday in November; and a cattle show in connection with the Farmers' Society is held annually. In 1871 the parish contained a population of 7,375, and the town 3,598; in 1881 the numbers were: for the parish, 7,037; for the town, 3,429.

KIRKMICHAEL AND DALRYMPLE,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CROSS-HILL.

Kirkmichael is a small village and parish, containing 15,930 acres, in the district of Carrick. The village is 76 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 22 S. from Kilmarnock, 10 S. of Ayr, the same distance E. of Dalmellington, 8 N.E. of Dailly, 4 W. by N. from Straiton, and 3½ E. from Maybole, pleasantly situated in a valley, on the road from Newton Stewart to Glasgow, 36 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly, towards the south and east mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated. The Girvan runs through the parish; the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrock water flows through the village, which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael; the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the churchyard is the tomb of Gilbert M'Adam, who was shot in 1685 by the laird of Culzean and Ballochmyle, for his adherence to the covenanters. The annual fair is held on the Friday before the last Wednesday in September. The Board school was built in 1875, at a cost of £1,100, and accommodates 150 scholars, Population of the parish in 1871, 2,254, and in 1881, 1,989; of the village, 343.

Cross-Hill is a village in the above parish, on the left bank of the Girvan, about two miles south of Kirkmichael, and is a quoad sacra parish in itself for church and school purposes. There are Established and Free Churches here, and also a Board school. Population in 1871, 835, and in 1881, 740.

Dalrymple is a small village and parish in the district of Kyle, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Doon, 4 miles N from Kirkmichael. The parish, which is about eight miles at its extreme length, and three in breadth, contains 7,833 acres, and comprises some beautiful undulating and flat land, mostly arable. In the eastern portion of the parish are several coal and ironstone pits, which are wrought by the Dalmellington Iron Company, Limited. The name Dalrymple is said to be derived from Dalrymole, signifying "the dale in which the king was slain;" and it is supposed that Coilus, a king of the Britons, was killed in battle in this place; its Gaelic name, however, was Dail-a-Chruim-Puill, or "dale of the crooked pool." Near the Roman road, which intersects the parish, was found in a moss a vessel of Roman bronze, by antiquarians conjectured to be of that kind used by the priests in their sacrificial oblations; and in 1834 was discovered, near the same spot, an ancient vase; both these relics are in the possession of the Rev. John Wallace, the minister of Dalrymple. In the parish are three British fortlets, on commanding sites, and the ruins of three castles; these with the beautiful loch of Martnaham, the waters of which are covered annually with the yellow and white water lily, are objects of considerable interest and curiosity to the visitor to this district. The Established and Free churches are the places of worship, and there is a stone school and school house, built by the School Board in 1875, at a cost of upwards of £1,500, to accommodate 150 scholars. In 1871 the population of the parish was 1,412, and in 1881, 1,362; of which 316 belong to the village.

KIRKOSWALD

IS a parish containing 14,861 acres, in the district of Carrick. The village, old and picturesque, is 13 miles S. from Ayr, and 4½ S.E. from Maybole, situated on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow, 90 miles from the former, and 48, by the new road, from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as it contains within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and the tourist. The sea coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams that wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the beautiful seat of the Marquis of Ailsa, who is lord of the manor. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens, with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort, mounted with thirteen guns, and a mortar battery, both kept in efficient order. In a low valley, between Kirkoswald and Maybole, are the remains of the abbey of Crossraguel, founded in 1244, by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary; at one period it was possessed by Cluniac monks from Paisley. At the Reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassillis, but it now pertains to the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, M.P., of Kilkerran. A lighthouse now stands upon the site of Turnberry Castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shauter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the hero of Burns' poem "Tam o' Shanter." Population of the parish in 1871, 1,846, and in 1881, 1,781.

POST OFFICE, KIRKOSWALD, David Orr, Post Master.—Letters arrive from all parts (from Maybole) at 9 20 a.m., and are despatched thereto at 9 30 a.m. and 3 30 p.m.——Money Order Office. The nearest Telegraph Office is at MAYBOLE.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE.

LARGS, popularly called the Largs, is a neat town and sea bathing place, in the parish of that name; 70 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s. w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 N. from Irvine, charmingly situated on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county, in a remarkably healthy and well-sheltered district, particularly on the north-east, in which direction it is separated from the better cultivated districts by a range of hills; hence a proverbial expression still in use, "Out of the world into the Largs." It is now one of the favourite retreats on the western coast for ruralising and bathing, the communications with Glasgow and other large towns on this side of the country being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steamboats, which ply daily on the Clyde; or by rail from Port Glasgow, or Greenock, to Wemyss Bay, thence by boat to Largs, a distance of about six miles from the latter place. A new line of railway was opened in June, 1885, connecting that of Fairlie, thus making a direct communication, via Ardrossan, to Glasgow. During the summer season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors, for all of whom good accommodation is provided by the inns and private lodging houses. There are some good shops, in which a fair amount of business is transacted in all the various departments of a retail trade, and the monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery. The annual fair, commencing on the first Tuesday in June after the 12th (St. Columbus' day), lasting for two days, has latterly fallen away to a mere semblence of its former bustle and activity. At Mackerston place there has been erected, at a cost of about £900, by the inhabitants of the town, a beautiful granite fountain, as a mark of respect to the late Mr. John Campbell, surgeon, who for 61 years was a resident of the town. The parish church, a handsome structure of stone, with a spire and clock, is a great ornament. There is also a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, an Episcopal church, and one for Roman Catholics; while the Brisbane Academy (an endowed establishment, recently amalgamated with the Board school) affords the inhabitants ample means for educating their families. Few districts possess more romantic scenery; the old castles of Skelmorlie, Knock and Fairlie, with Brisbane House, ornament the parish. It was on the plains of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots under Alexander III. and the Danes under Haco, King of Norway, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. In the glen near Kelburn is a cascade, which has a fall of fifty feet perpendicular; and various other natural beauties arrest the attention and excite admiration of the traveller. An aisle in the church, built by Sir Robert Montgomerie, of Skelmorlie, more than two centuries back, has underneath a vault, in which lies the body of Sir Robert, enclosed in a leaden coffin bearing a Latin inscription, signifying "I was dead before myself, I anticipated my proper burial alone of all mortals, following the example of Cæsar;" alluding, it is said, to Charles V., who it may be remembered, had his funeral obsequies performed previous to his death. The explanation usually given of this strange affair is that Sir Robert was a very pious man, and was in the habit of making nocturnal descents into the vaults to perform his devotions, thus burying himself alive. Sir James Montgomerie, Skelmorlie, a subsequent representative of the family, was a distinguished leader among the Scotch Presbyterians at the time of the revolution, but is reported to have afterwards made himself conspicuous by entering into a conspiracy with the ultra-Jacobites, for the restoration of King James. The acreage of the parish is 21,850, and the population was in 1871, 4,087, and in 1881, 5,149.

FAIRLIE, or Fairley, is a small village in the parish of and about two and a half miles S. from Largs. In the vicinity is Kelburn Castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie Castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburn Castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some elegant villas, which harmonise with and adorn the prevalent features of the parish; and the marine scenery is truly beautiful and enlivening. There are two places of worship in Fairlie, one an Established church, the other a Free church; likewise a handsome Board school. Considerable business is done here in yacht building, being noted for the beauty of build and excellent sailing qualities of the vessels launched from the various yards. Population in 1871, 291, and in 1881, 672, which is included in the above.

MAYBOLE,

AND THE VILLAGES OF CULROY OR MINISHANT, AND DUNURE OR FISHERTON.

MAYBOLE is a small neat market and post town, the capital of its parish, in the district of Carrick, 87 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 52 N. by E. from Portpatrick, 44 S.S.W. from Glasgow, 25 N. from Ballantrae, 22 S. by W. from Kilmarnock, 12 N. by E. from Girvan, and 9 S. from Ayr. It lies in a charming part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence, with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony in November, 1516, on a grant to Gilbert, Earl of Cassillis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1639, an act ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings. Several of the dwellings bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were, at a distant period, the domiciles of dignified personages. The mansion house or castle of the Cassillis family, is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole. It is a stately, well-built structure, standing in the centre of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassillis. It is now occupied by Thomas Smith, Esq. factor to the Marquis of Ailsa, who is lord of the manor. The building now used as the town hall belonged to the Kennedys, of Blairquhan. The principal business carried on here is the manufacture of boots and shoes; there are also two works for the manufacture of agricultural implements, and weaving is carried on to some extent for Glasgow houses.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassillis family and a few others in the neighbourhood. The parish church, a quoad sacra, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, an Episcopal church, a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, and a Roman Catholic chapel are the places of worship. All the old schools have been done away with, and a fine stone building, two storeys in height, has been put up in place of them by the School Board, at a cost of upwards of £5,000, and capable of accommodating 750 scholars. There are two other Board schools in the parish—one at Minishant, which is a stone building, with a house for the master adjoining, was built in 1875, for one hundred scholars, at a cost of £1,200; and one at Fisherton, for one hundred scholars, at a cost of £650. The town is governed by police commissioners. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the Carrick Farmers' Society are held here; the annual one is on the first Thursday in August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May and November; the quarterly in August merges into the yearly assemblage. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which are the celebrated ruins, called Crossraguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald), and Kilkenzie castle, which was in a similar state of dilapidation, but has of late years undergone repairs; it once belonged to a branch of the Cassillis family, who were for a long time hereditary bailies of Carrick. Ancient coins have been frequently found in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly called "St. Cuthbert's" and "Well Trees"; the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs on the third Thursday in April and October. The acreage of the parish is 21,993. The population of the quoad sacra parish in 1871 was 2,701, and in 1881, 2,935; the town having a population of 4,474.

CULROY OR MINISHANT is a small village in the parish of Maybole, three miles and a half from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is five miles and a half distant. A manufactory for woollen goods is established in this village. There are also a Board school, and a church erected by Sir Peter Coats, in memory of his late wife, who died 21st April, 1877.

DUNURE OR FISHERTON is a small village in the parish of Maybole, six and three quarter miles therefrom, and seven and a quarter from Ayr, chiefly inhabited by fishermen. There is an Established church and manse, a Board school and post office. Dunure House, the propery of Francis T. R. Kennedy, Esq. is at present occupied by George White, Esq. Near the village are the ruins of Dunure castle, the ancient seat of the Kennedys, who have now removed their residence to Culzean.

MUIRKIRK,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF GLENBUCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MUIRKIRK is a parish containing 30,229 acres in Kyle district. The village, a thriving and considerable one, is 50 miles W.S.W. from Edinburgh, 30 S. from Glasgow, 26 E. by N. from Ayr, 24 S.E. from Kilmarnock, and 16 N.W. from Sanquhar, situated near the right bank of the water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr. Although in a district rude and bleak, the land is being fast reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character; another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture, and in 1835, the black-faced sheep fed in this parish carried the Highland Society's prize, and also gained the first prize at the Paris Exhibition in 1862. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been very good to the miner, for coal, iron and limestone are liberally dispensed throughout the territory. At the Eglinton Iron Company's works are three blast and several puddling furnaces and rolling mills constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig and malleable iron. Extensive works have lately been added by the Company for the manufacture of chemicals. Banking accommodation is afforded by a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, under the management of Mr. James Gibson. The principal proprietors of the land in the parish are Charles Howatson, Esq. J.P., the Earl of Home (of Douglas), John G. A. Baird, Esq., M.P. of Cambusdoon, and the Hon. A. M. Cathcart, of Brocklock. The parish is also celebrated for grouse and other shooting. Its length is nine miles by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the south and south-west by Auchinleck, and the west and north-west by Sorn and Galston. The places of worship here are an Established church, a Free church, one for the United Presbyterians, an Evangelical Union chapel, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Glasgow and South-Western line of railway runs close to the village, at which there is a station. In November, 1887, a handsome building was opened, called the Baird's Institute, the munificent gift of J. G. A. Baird, Esq. M.P. The building is in the domestic Gothic style of architecture, and consists of reading room, recreation room, and library, also caretaker's apartments, offices, etc. The total cost was over £2,000. Mr. Bell, of Glasgow, was the architect, and Messrs. D. & J. Milligan, of Ayr, the contractors. Fairs are held for hiring on the first Tuesday after the 18th February, and the first Thursday after the 18th December, and for cattle, &c. on the second Friday in June. Population of the village in 1881, 3,470; of the parish, 5,123.

GLENBUCK is a small mining village in the parish of Muirkirk, and situated about three miles N.E. from that town. The works of the Cairntable Gas Coal Co. Limited, give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. There is a public school, also a railway station on the Caledonian line, about one mile from the village. Population returned with the parish.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a manufacturing town and burgh of barony in the parish of LOUDOUN, district of Cunninghame, 24 miles S. of Glasgow, 18 N.E. of Ayr, 7 E. by S. of Kilmarnock, and 16 N. of Cumnock, situated on the bank of the river Irvine, about two miles east of Galston. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV. in 1490, and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The bailies are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except the court of sessions, and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. There is a police commission for the better regulation and improvement of the town, consisting of seven members; the chief magistrate is the chief commissioner. The manufacture of muslins and lace is carried on here extensively, a large number of hands being employed in this branch. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. There is a Board School, also one endowed by the late Lady Flora Hastings, and built at a cost of over £6,000; and three Sabbath evening schools—in the latter more than seven hundred children of the working classes receive instruction. The Working Men's Institute was erected by Miss Brown, of Lanfine, and is similar to those at Galston and Darvel. In the centre of the town is seen the remains of an old castle, said to have been erected as early as that of Edinburgh, but record is silent or obscure concerning its ancient possessors. Within the parish, and about a mile and a half from the town, is Loudoun Castle, the elegant seat of Baron Donington. It is large and magnificent, in the castellated or baronial style, standing in the midst of an extensive and well-wooded park. Near the mansion is the old parish kirk of Loudoun, bearing the early date of 1015. The only part now standing is that which formed the choir, and is now the place of sepulchre of the noble families Loudoun and Hastings; and here rest the remains of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings, to whose memory, and that of her mother, a granite obelisk was erected in 1888, by a near relative, Miss Henry, of Cheltenham. A branch line of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway is open for traffic as far as Newmilns, and a public conveyance running between there and Darvel attends the arrival and departure of all trains. The parish of Loudoun comprises 15,486 acres; population in 1881, 5,239. The population of Newmilns in the same year was 2,860, part of which is in Galston parish. Since the census of 1881, the population of these places has, however, largely increased.

DARVEL is a considerable postal village in the same parish as Newmilns, and is comprised of one principal street, from which a few small ones diverge. The manufacture of lace, lace and tapestry curtains, and muslin is extensively carried on, and affords employment to a number of hands. The Marchioness of Hastings some years ago formed a cemetery in this village. There is also a free school, endowed by the late Alexander Mair, for the education of the children of this village. The latter school has now been placed under the direction of the School Board. The places of worship are the Established church, an edifice in the Gothic style, erected at a cost of about £3,000, a Free church, and one each belonging to the United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and Evangelical Union, some two or three being of a comparitively recent date. The Working Men's Institute was erected by Miss Brown, of Lanfine, in July, 1870, at a cost of £2,200; it contains a library and reading room, also a room for various kinds of amusements. Population in 1881, 1,690, which has since that date much increased.

OCHILTREE

IS a small but pleasant village, in the parish of that name, district of Kyle, 64 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 49 N.W. from Dumfries, 37 S. from Glasgow, 28 N. by E. from Girvan, 22 N.W. from Sanquhar, 16 S. from Kilmarnock, the like distance N.E. from Maybole, 11½ E. from Ayr, and 4 W. from Old Cumnock, situated on the south side of the Lugar water, and on the high road from Ayr to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The country around is delightfully picturesque, and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree House. Ochiltree formerly gave a baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. There are an Established church, a Free church, and public schools; also a subscription library well selected, and a reading room. The acreage of the parish is 18,328. Population in 1871, 1,656, and in 1881, 1,493; of which the village possessed 523.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS, a seaport town, is situated partly in the parish of Ardrossan, and partly in the parish of Stevenston; it lies between these towns, and is less than a mile from each, 74 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 30 S.S.W. from Glasgow, 19 N. from Ayr, and 14 W. by N. from Kilmarnock. The town was made a burgh on 25th May, 1885, by the adoption of the general Police Act for Scotland. It is a place of great resort for summer residents from all quarters, the accommodation in neat, comfortable cottages having been greatly increased in recent years, and the communication by express and ordinary trains offering special facilities for daily travellers in summer. In the beginning of last century a harbour was constructed for the shipment of coal, of which one of the most extensive fields in Scotland lies in the immediate neighbourhood. The first canal made in Scotland was formed here by Mr. Cuninghame, for conveyance of coal towards the harbour. The shipping and shipbuilding trade was extensive and flourishing for many years, but on the erection of the extensive iron works at Ardeer, Stevenston, by Messrs. Merry and Cuninghame, in 1852, the shipping was for the most part transferred to the commodious harbour and docks of Ardrossan. Saltcoats derived its name from the cots or cottages occupied by the first inhabitants, who were employed in making salt, in which article there was at one time a very large trade; and it is one of the few if not the only place now in Scotland where there is manufactured that superior marine salt so greatly appreciated for dairy purposes, and which has contributed in some degree to the superiority of the far-famed Dunlop cheese. Though deprived of its former extensive shipping trade, Saltcoats is now a much more flourishing town than ever it was in former days. Its close proximity to Ardrossan, on the one side, with its extensive harbours, docks and public works, the two towns being nearly united, and with Stevenston on the other, where are the Ardeer Foundry Company's extensive works, and the Ardeer colliery, and the opening of the Auchenharvie colliery at the east end of the town, has not only improved the trade of the place, but has also increased the population and stimulated building to a very large extent. In the west end quite a new town of private residences and summer quarters has been built of late. Perhaps no town in the west of Scotland has made more progress in the last thirty years in internal improvements; the town has been thoroughly drained by sewers through all the streets, and branch drains to every dwelling-house, accomplished by and at the instance of the two Parochial Boards, who carry out a vigilant sanitary control over the town. At a threatened approach of cholera some years ago, Dr. Littlejohn was appointed by the Board of Supervision to survey the coast towns, and of Saltcoats he says: "I found the town of Saltcoats in an excellent sanitary state. No Scotch town of equal population that I have visited shows so much creditable sanitary improvement. The drainage is complete, the paving is excellent. I cannot conclude without bringing the conduct of the Local Authority of the parish of Ardrossan (Saltcoats) under the favourable consideration of the Board of Supervision." As a result of these sanitary improvements, and indicative of the healthfulness of the locality, the death rate has for many years been very low. A justice of peace court is regularly held in the Town Hall on the first Friday of every month. Within the last thirty years there have been erected in this place five new churches and three new manses, beside the Free Church school and other public schools; and there has been constructed at the north end of the town a handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 600 children. The gas works of the town combine three remarkable features, the cheapest gas, the highest dividend, and the best quality maintained in the shire. The town lamps are lighted by the company free. An abundant supply of gravitation water of excellent quality has recently been introduced. There are a few buildings of note. The Town House was built in 1825, and consists of a spacious hall, with ante-rooms, and is surmounted by a steeple; it is a prominent object when approaching the town. The Royal Bank of Scotland and the Bank of Scotland have branches here, and each occupies a handsome building. The Mission Coast Home has been a remarkable success here. This institution, which was commenced in a room and kitchen by Mr. Jas. Smith, a devoted missionary, and ably conducted by Mr. William Bryden, now consists of three long buildings, affording accommodation and treatment free to about sixty inmates, each remaining for a short period; and the improvement in health, which is the general result of a short stay in the home, has become so remarkable that there are sometimes hundreds of applicants waiting their turn for admission. The cost is defrayed by voluntary subscription. Saltcoats is much resorted to for sea bathing, the extensive sandy beach on each side of the town being particularly suitable, the water being considered strong and pure. Salt water baths were, a few years ago, erected in connection with the principal hotel, the Saracen's Head. The Lanarkshire and Ayrshire railway, which was opened in the summer of 1888, has a station in the town, and the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. has just erected a very fine station and rooms. Population of the town in 1871, 4,624, and in 1881, 5,096.

STEVENSTON is a mining village, one mile from Saltcoats, and three from Kilwinning. It derives its name from Stephen or Steven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Morville, a constable of Scotland; the latter, a very celebrated man, died in 1189. Under this grant, Stephen settled here, and gave his patronymic designation to the place. The parish abounds in valuable seams of coal. The extensive iron works of Ardeer were erected here by Messrs. Merry & Cuninghame in 1852. There are very large works for the manufacture of dynamite, in the occupation of Nobel's Explosives Co. Limited. The extensive sands stretching from Saltcoats to Irvine have been frequently suggested as a suitable deposit ground for the sewage of Glasgow. The Established church is a large handsome building, of modern erection, very prominently situated. The old church formerly belonged to the monks of Kilwinning. There is also a Free church. In the centre of the town is erected a commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 650 children. The parish contains 3,771 acres. Population of the whole parish in 1871, 5,019, and in 1881, 5,604, and of the village, 3,556.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STEWARTON is a parish of 13,626 acres, in the district of Cunninghame. The town is 16 miles S. by W. from Glasgow, 8 N. from Irvine, five and a half N. from Kilmarnock, and three N.N.W. from Fenwick; situated in a pleasant part of the country, on the banks of the water of Annock, close to a station on the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Kilmarnock Joint Railway. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and adorned by several tastefully laid out seats of the gentry. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and obscure village, and it is only of a comparatively recent date that, owing to the general extension of trades and manufactures, it has considerably increased in size. Several woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades. The staple articles of manufacture are Scotch bonnets and military forage caps, in which branches there are about twenty employers. The manufacture of hosiery has lately been introduced, and gives employment to a number of hands. Ample banking accommodation is also afforded the town and neighbourhood by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, each having a branch here. The invention of "portable bee boxes" by a Mr. Allan, of this town, has proved a great advantage in the management of bees; these boxes are so constructed as to prevent "swarming," and to produce a very superior honey and comb; it obtains a much higher price in the market than any other kind, and is known by the name of "Stewarton honey." District courts are held on the first Thursday of each month, for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop, and Fenwick. The public reading room, to which is attached a library and billiard room, &c., is in the Institute Buildings, and there is also a commodious hall admirably adapted for concerts, &c., with seating for about 600 persons. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and for United Presbyterians and Independents. There is a handsome Board school, erected under the Scotch Education Act, which affords accommodation for about 600 children. Fairs are held on the Thursday before the first Friday in January, and on Monday next before the first Thursday in May, for horses, cattle, and farm and dairy produce; and on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October, for the like commodities, and for stock and agricultural and dairy utensils, also for hiring servants. The population of the parish of Stewarton in 1871 was 4,478, and in 1881, 4,309, that for the town being 3,130.

DUNLOP is a village 2½ miles N. from Stewarton, romantically seated on the banks of the Glazart, on the main road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance, through the trees which embosom it, has an agreeable and retired appearance. A handsome church, erected in 1835, is ornamental to the neighbourhood; its predecessor having suffered from the combined effects of age and weather. In the churchyard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1641, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans Hamilton, who for forty-one years was minister of the parish; it contains a well-executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention. A schoolhouse was also built by the same nobleman, in the wall of which is a stone bearing the above date, and an inscription stating amongst other particulars that it was erected and endowed by him "in love of his parish, in King James the Sixt his Raigne;" although in excellent preservation, it has long ceased to be occupied as an educational establishment. The village likewise possesses a Board school, which, in architecture, might contrast favourably with any in the country. The parish to which the village gives name, lies principally in the bailiery of Cunninghame, and county of Ayr, but on the north it extends to Renfrewshire. It has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. Several firms are also engaged in ham curing. About the close of the seventeenth century, one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process in this district previous to that period; at present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of "Dunlop," a large quantity being made here annually. There is also a considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village and surrounding territory. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established here. Dunlop House, in this parish, is one of the finest mansions in the county. On this estate, resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the "O'Great Stone," supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs for the sale of dairy stock are held, one about the middle of May, the other on the 12th of November; both are generally well attended. In 1871 the parish of Dunlop, the acreage of which is 7,179, had a population of 1,160, and in 1881, 1,363.

STRAITON,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF PATNA.

STRAITON is a large parish of 49,801 acres, in Carrick district, The village, a neat one, is 80 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 26 S. from Kilmarnock, 11 S.E. from Ayr, the same distance N.E. from Girvan, 7 E.S.E. from Maybole, the same distance N.E. from Dailly, and 6 S.W. from Dalmellington; finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart 48 miles S. by W. from the former, and 30 N. from the latter town. The parish, which extends about twenty miles in length by eight in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood and several extensive plantations, and besides the Girvan and lakes it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are for the most part occupied in agricultural pursuits. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work of which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases or urns, containing ashes. The Marquis of Ailsa, A. F. M'Adam, Esq., the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, M.P., and Sir Edward Hunter Blair are the proprietors of the land. Straiton has a neat parish churchand a Board school. Blairquhan Castle, the property of Sir Edward Hunter Blair, Bart., is at present occupied by G. E. Worthington, Esq. It is built in the Tudor style, and is situate about one mile from the village on the road to Girvan. Genoch Lodge, three miles and a half from the village, the property of the Marquis of Ailsa, is at present tenanted by Major Sturrock and James Dykes, Esq. as a shooting and fishing residence. The population in 1871 of the quoad sacra parish was 758, and in 1881, 701.

PATNA is a small village, in the parish of Straiton, situated on the banks of the Doon, which abounds with trout. Coal and ironstone are obtained plentifully in this neighbourhood, and furnishes employment to many of the villagers. The Duke of Portland is the proprietor of the land about here. The places of worship are the Established and United Presbyterian churches. There is also a Board school to accommodate two hundred scholars, erected in 1876, at a cost of £1,800. Population of the village in 1871, 766, and in 1881, 603.

TARBOLTON,

FAILFORD, STAIR, JOPPA AND COYLTON.

TARBOLTON is a parish, containing 12,059 acres, in the district of Kyle; the village, or town, is 12 miles S.E. from Irving, eight S. from Kilmarnock, and eight N.E. from Ayr, situated about five miles from the shore of the Firth of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country, and occupying a considerable space of ground. In the reign of the second Charles, it was erected into a burgh of barony, and granted to John Cunningham, Esq. of Enterkine. The parish church is rather an elegant structure, with a beautiful spire, which contains a clock, having four dials; it was completed in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £2,500. A free library, the gift of the late John Lorimer, Esq., who was a native of Tarbolton, was opened in 1878. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth is about four and a half. The Duke of Portland, John Bell, Esq., of Enterkine; Hugh Hamilton, Esq., of Pinmore; Edward Hunter Blair, Esq., of Brownhill; the Executors of William Orr Paterson, Esq., of Montgomery; John Stirling, Esq., of Whitehaven; William Cooper, Esq., of Failford; the Executors of William C. Cunningham, Esq., of Afton Lodge; Thomas Davidson, Esq., of Drumley, and John C. Montgomerie, Esq., J.P., of Dalmore, are the principal heritors. A fair is held the first Tuesday after the 11th of June. Population of parish in 1881, 3,599, of which Tarbolton village contained 922.

JOPPA is a village, in the parish of COYLTON, about seven miles S.W. from Tarbolton. The parish, which is adjacent to the west border of Kyle district, is about ten miles in length, by two in breadth, and contains 11,584 acres. The church, erected in 1833, is a handsome building, with accommodation for a congregation of more than seven hundred persons. Population of parish of Coylton in 1881, 3,100.

The parish of STAIR is in the district of Kyle, lying on the south or right bank of the river Ayr, extending six miles in length by about two in breadth, and contains 5,376 acres. It was first erected into an independent parish in 1653, when it was severed from Ochiltree, for the accommodation of the noble family of Dalrymple, of Stair. The village, which comprises but a few dwellings and a neat parish church, is about two and a half miles S. from Tarbolton. Its situation is most romantic, and many highly ornamental mansions add to the beauty of the surrounding country, which abounds with coal. The earldom of Stair is now merged in that of Dumfries. Population of the parish in 1881, 928.

TROON, DUNDONALD AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving seaport, in the parish of Dundonald, is situated 75 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 31 S.W. from Glasgow, 7 S. from Irvine, 9 S.W. from Kilmarnock, and about 8 N. from Ayr. Under the patronage of the Duke of Portland, this place has advanced steadily to a degree of eminence, and bids fair to become one of the most important seaports on the west coast of Scotland. Possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point, Troon is obviously destined to attain high rank in maritime estimation. It has two superior dry docks for repairing vessels, large storehouses, a lighthouse, a shipbuilding yard, and a rope and sail manufactory. There are two banking establishments and a reading room, all of which are situated near the harbour. From the extremity of the harbour, directly to Kilmarnock, runs a railway (one of the earliest in the country), on which immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and thence shipped for Ireland, France, &c. The town is progressively enlarging, and in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited in the bathing season by numerous respectable families, for whose accommodation many residences have been built. Extensive golfing links are connected with the town, where this national game is much played. The places of worship are an Established church, recently erected into a parish church; a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians, for whose accommodation a handsome new building was erected in 1888. The Roman Catholics have also a chapel here, with a school in connection therewith. There are two Board schools, under one head master. Population in 1871, 2,790, and in 1881, 2,631.

DUNDONALD is a parish on the sea coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore, from the water of Irvine towards the south, and containing 12,365 acres. The village, situated about four miles from Troon (which is also in the parish), contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church, together with a Board school. Dundonald Castle is a ruin of great celebrity It was erected in the twelfth century, and long occupied by the Lord High Stewards of Scotland; and in it Robert the Second died. It stands on an elevated and commanding situation, within two miles of the sea. Population of the parish in 1871, 6,964, and in 1881, 8,089.

SYMINGTON, a parish of 3,736 acres, is in Kyle district, bounded by Monkton on the south, and Dundonald on the north, the village being about two miles from the latter. It contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church, which has a school in connection; there is also a Board school. The lands in this district were held at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stuart, by Symon Lockhart, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day. Population in 1871, 792, and in 1881, 697.

BARASSIE, a sea bathing village, and a station on the Glasgow and South-Western line, is a mile and a half north of Troon.

LOANS is a village two miles north-east of Troon.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE, is a parish of 10,119 acres in the district of Cunninghame; the village is 73 miles W.S.W. from Edinburgh, 30 S.W. from Glasgow, 24 S.S.W. from Paisley, the like distance N. from Ayr, 22 S. from Greenock, 19 N.W. from Kilmarnock, 12 N. from Irvine, 7½ S. from Largs, 7 S.W. from Dalry, 5 N. from Saltcoats, 4½ S. from Fairlie, and 4 N.W. from Ardrossan; surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with a few genteel and handsome residences. The ruins of Law Castle and Porten Cross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. The town, or village, seems to be making but very slow progress in the march of improvement. Branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are established here. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving.

The places of worship are the parish church, and Episcopal Free and United Presbyterian churches. There is a handsome Board school, and the village supports a considerable library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Frith of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The new line of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway being opened through to Largs, there is now a station here. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity, and it is worthy of remark that off the sea line of the parish, one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms of water. An attempt was made about a century ago to examine the internal condition of this ship and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her hulk. A number of excellent residences have recently been built for the convenience of summer visitors. In 1871 the entire parish of West Kilbride had a population of 1,091 persons, and in 1881, 2,081, the village possessing about half of that number.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE ARDROSSAN AND FAIRLIE SECTION OF THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH-WESTERN LINE.

Station, WEST KILBRIDE—Robert Dickson, station master

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern, with a slip or apex inserted between the counties of Moray and Aberdeen. Its extent is fifty miles from north to south, and thirty-two miles from east to west, with an average breadth of twelve, containing 686 square miles, or 439,219 acres; it diminishes to an apex at the extreme western end, but the base on the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron for a considerable distance forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie, and some other spots of land, belong to Banffshire, which both in point of size and in population ranks as the fifteenth county in Scotland.

Soil, Surface and Climate, Produce and Manufactures.—The soil, with few exceptions, is deep loam or tenacious clay. The face of the country is agreeably diversified by an intermixture of valleys and flat ground among the ranges of hills, with many beautiful fertile braes, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture. The Strath of Glen-Avon proceeds from the forest of Glen-Avon, in a north-easterly direction, or on the left, and Strath Devon the right. Betwixt these is Glen-Livet, from whence, in a north-easterly direction, diverges Glen-Fiddich. The principal eminences in the county are:—Noath, 1,880; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377 Knockhill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,558; Ben Rinnes, 2,747; and Cairngorn, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, potatoes, and sometimes wheat; but great attention is paid to the cultivation of turnips for feeding purposes, the rearing of cattle forming for the most part the chief object of the farmer. The Aberdeenshire polled cattle and the pure short-horned are the breeds most esteemed. In many parts of the county fine flocks of sheep are to be met with, both of the Cheviot and the black-faced varieties. The fisheries are also of importance, more than a dozen towns and villages being connected, to a greater or less extent, with this industry. Cod, ling, haddock, whiting, halibut, skate and flounder frequent the Firth, and turbot and mackerel are occasionally caught, whilst in the season the herring yields a rich harvest to the fishermen. The curing of fish is of consequence, many persons being engaged in this branch of trade in several of the towns, in which are also extensive distilleries, Glenlivet whisky having become a famous brand. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county has experienced considerable improvement, in being opened out by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county, and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called "Portsoy marble," as well as a species of granite which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, ironstone, marl and slate are also found in various parts. The chief articles of export are grain, fish and whisky; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron put together is also an article of great consideration. The principal imports are coal, iron, timber and manures. The climate of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frost and snow frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered, but at times are not finished until the end of October. The lower part of the shire, from Duff-house to Forglen and Kinnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon Castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing most parts of the country in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

Rivers, Railways, &c.—The waters of this county are the Spey, the Livet, the Avon, the Fiddich, the Deveron, the Isla, the Conglas, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable; but this, as well as the Spey, yields excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery, in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance. The Great North of Scotland line gives great facility for railway communication, most of the towns being connected therewith, either on the main line or one of its numerous branches.

Divisions, Representation, &c.—Banffshire comprehends twenty-six civil and quoad sacra parishes, and is partly in the synod of Aberdeen and partly in that of Moray in Ross; it contains two royal burghs—Banff and Cullen; these are also contributory burghs, or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the Senate. One member represents the shire at large, the present representative being Robert W. Duff, Esq. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, K.G. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 62,023 persons, and by those for 1881, 62,736. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named period was 12,568; uninhabited, 509; in course of erection, 74. The parliamentary constituency in 1887-88 numbered 7,164. The valuation of the county for 1887-88 was (exclusive of railways), £227,834, and the valuation of railways, £21,827.

ABERLOUR,

CRAIGELLACHIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERLOUR is a village founded in 1812, and created a burgh of barony in 1814. The village (which was formerley called Charlestown) is in the parish of its name, and is situated about six miles S.W. of Dufftown, where the river Lour joins the Spey. It consists of one long street and a large square. The places of worship are an Established church, a Gothic structure with tower and clock, a Free church, and an Episcopal church; the latter a very handsome structure in the early English style of architecture. Near this is an Orphanage, established in 1875, open to all denominations, and supported by voluntary contributions. This institution is for the reception of orphans and fatherless children in Scotland and elsewhere. Girls are also received and trained for service, and care is taken of them when they go into the world to earn their bread, and a home made for them when out of situation or ill. There are now upwards of 200 inmates. The accommodation is far short of the demand made for admission, and steps are being taken to greatly enlarge the present buildings. Ben Rinnes, 2,755 feet above the level of the sea, is in this parish. A short distance from the village stands Aberlour House, formerly the property of Miss Macpherson Grant, but now belonging to John Ritchie Findlay, Esq., D.L., J.P. It is in the Grecian Doric order of architecture, of quadrangular form, and of two storeys, and from its situation splendid views of the surrounding country can be obtained. There are two respectable branch banks in the village. The distilling of whisky is carried on extensively in the parish. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in April, third Thursday in May, and second Thursday in November. Acreage of the parish, 14,884. Population in 1881, 1,912.

CRAIGELLACHIE is a pleasant village in the parish of, and situated two miles N.E. of Aberlour. The Spey is here crossed by a handsome iron bridge of a single span of 150 feet, which was erected from designs by Telford, in 1815, at a cost of £8,000. From the bridge a fine view of the river is obtained.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE GREAT NORTH OF SCOTLAND LINE.

Station, ABERLOUR—John Davidson, station master [station master
Station, CRAIGELLACHIE—Thomas Taylor,

BANFF,

ALVAH, WHITEHILLS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BANFF is a royal burgh, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name, 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 35 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 13 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy, pleasantly situated on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedom of Boin, whence the name seems to be derived, for in some old charters it is written Boinceffe and Bainceffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore, in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh in 1372, by Robert II. who endowed it with the same privileges and placed it on the same footing as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and five councillors. Banff and Macduff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, return one member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq.

The town comprises several well-built streets, with handsome shops, and is remarkably clean and neat. From the sea it presents a very interesting appearance, and from any point of view may be regarded as lively and particularly cheerful. The principal street is ornamented with suitable county buildings and a modern town house, the latter surmounted by an elegant spire. An ornamental drinking fountain, presented by the town of Banff in memory of Walter Biggar, Esq., and Mrs. Ann Duff, his wife, was a few years ago erected, and adds to the picturesqueness of this part of the burgh. There are also public baths, a museum, and libraries. A social club and newsroom was opened in September, 1881, and receives a fair share of patronage. A newspaper, the Banffshire Journal, with a large circulation, is published in the town. Two railways have their terminus in Banff, one from the south by way of Turriff, the other from the west by Strathisla. The burgh boasts of one of the finest hotels in the north.

The river Deveron, which abounds with salmon, is here crossed by a substantially-constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of Macduff. From the bridge a fine view is obtained of Duff House, the seat of the Earl of Fife. The elegant mansion is partly in the Corinthian and partly in the composite style of architecture, and the front is elaborately decorated with sculpture. A wing has been added at an expense of about £4,000. The interior is replete with curiosities, and embellished with an extensive collection of paintings by the most celebrated foreign and British artists.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, has a greater depth, and affords very good shelter. A Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in use. The port of Banff stands sixth in the list of Scotch ports as regards tonnage of sailing ships. The number of vessels on the register is 96, the aggregate burden of which is 15,994 tons; but a number of other vessels trade to the port. The chief trade is of an export nature, and comprises salmon, herring and other fish. There are six branch banks and a custom house, and the merchants have the privilege of a bonded warehouse. There is a large distillery, besides a brewery, and an extensive saw mill. An iron foundry has long been in operation, and does an extensive business. Ship building, rope and sail making, and tanning are also carried on.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a neat modern erection, with handsome spire; a Free church, and chapels belonging to Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists. Chalmers' Hospital was founded in 1861, in terms of a bequest by the late Alexander Chalmers, of Clunie, long a merchant in the town of Banff, and is for the support, maintenance, cure, and relief of destitute sick paupers, lunatics, and other diseased and poor infirm persons, of both sexes, born, domiciliated, and resident in any town or parish in the county of Banff; the inhabitants whereof shall make collections at their respective parish churches in aid of the funds of the hospital. It is adapted to accommodate fifty patients, with the requisite buildings for officials and attendants. A permanent revenue for the support of the hospital is derived from the rental of the land of Clunie and Knockorth. The building is situated in the seatown, and is an imposing erection. Banff academy once stood high as an educational institution, but since the Education Act, it has passed into the hands of the School Board; and, independent of other superior scholastic establishments, there are charity schools for the children of the humbler classes. There are also two boarding establishments for young ladies, so that few burghs offer greater educational facilities. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements in the burgh; but of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of the site. Edward I. visited Banff Castle on Sunday, the 22nd July, 1296, after Baliol, King of Scotland, had surrendered to Edward at Montrose, on the 7th July. After he had defeated Wallace at the battle of Falkirk, Edward again marched north and visited Banff Castle a second time, on the 4th September, 1298, and the public records show that it was the last stronghold possessed by the English, north of the Grampians. The Castle thereafter became a constabulary, the residence of the king's representative or constable, who exercised judicial authority in the county. Dr. James Sharp, the celebrated Archbishop of St. Andrews, was born in Banff Castle, in May, 1613. The society of the place is polished and agreeable, while the size and position of the town place within reach of the inhabitants all the comforts of a city, with most of the privileges of rural life. The weekly corn and provision markets are held on Friday, Brandon fair on the Friday before the 26th of May, or the 26th if a Friday, and on the Friday before the 22nd of November, or the 22nd if a Friday, the harvest feeing market on the first Friday of August, old style. In 1881, Banff had a population of 4,203, and the parliamentary burgh 7,844 persons.

ALVAH is a parish 2½ miles S.S.W. of Banff. The river Deveron is here crossed by a bridge, erected by the Earl of Fife. The parish is six miles long and three wide, and is for the most part fertile. There is a church of the Establishment. The hill of Alvah is a conspicuous landmark for this coast. Population of the quoad sacra parish in 1881, 1,356.

WHITEHILLS is a village in the parish of Boyndie, 2 miles W.N.W. of Banff, chiefly inhabited by fishermen. The parish, which is five miles long by two wide, contains an Established church, a Free church, and a Methodist chapel. The Banffshire Lunatic Asylum and the interesting ruins of Boyne Castle are also in this parish. Population in 1881, 929.

BUCKIE,

RATHVEN, PORT GORDON, PORTESSIE, ENZIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE, which was established as a fishing village a little more than a century ago, has now grown to be among the largest and most important towns in the county of Banff. Its name, unlike most of the other places in the district, which are of Gaelic derivation, is obviously of German origin, being derived from Bucht—a bay. Situated as it is on the shore of Moray Frith, its name is accurately descriptive. It is in the parish of Rathven, 20 miles W. from Banff, the county town; 6 W. from Cullen, and 7 E. from Fochabers. Its population has been increasing steadily every decade; the last census (1881) having registered a total of 4,500. In the beginning of 1888 the General Police Act was adopted, and Easter Buckie or Buckie proper, and Nether Buckie are both included in the Police Burgh of Buckie. The town is divided by the burn, Buckie proper, of which the trustees of the late John Gordon, Esq. of Cluny, are the superiors, lying on the east, and Nether Buckie, of which Sir Robert G. Gordon, Bart., of Letterfourie, is superior, on the west of the said burn. The tenure under which property is held is mainly feu right. As might be expected from the origin of the town, and also its natural capabilities, fishing is the principal trade. The Buckie fishing district, comprising the neighbouring stations on the coast, ranks the foremost in the kingdom in respect of the number of boats owned and employed, and also in value. It is possessed of two harbours, the one in Nether Buckie, constructed about 28 years ago, at a cost of £18,000. Two-thirds of this amount was contributed by the Board of Fisheries, and the other third by Sir Robert G. Gordon. The other harbour, which was commenced in 1874, was built at the sole expense of the late John Gordon, Esq. of Cluny, at a cost of about £70,000. For depth of water and other capabilities this harbour is allowed to be the finest in all the Moray Frith. It is made of concrete, and is in all respects admirably and strongly constructed. D. Cunningham, Esq. C.E. Dundee, was the engineer. A number of curing stations and other stores have been erected by the Cluny Trustees, and are all occupied. There is now a splendid steamer service from Leith and Aberdeen to Buckie and other Moray Frith ports, which has already developed a good trade. The Great North of Scotland and Highland Railway Companies have each stations here. Approached either by sea or land this town presents an imposing appearance, possessed as it is of such fine ecclesiastical buildings. First and foremost is the Roman Catholic chapel with its two spires, the new Established church with its crowned tower, the Free and Episcopal chapels, both with elegant spires, besides the U.P. church, which is a substantial building. There are two good hotels in the town, the Cluny, in High street, and the St. Andrew's, in Buckpool. The houses generally are of a good and substantial character, and besides a number of handsome private buildings, the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank, Limited, occupy respectively first-class and modern buildings. Besides the fish curing trade, there are other industries springing up. There are net and rope manufactories, a foundry and steam saw mills, and at Inchgower is a large distillery, of which Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co. are the proprietors. With railway communication and suitable steamer service from the north side of the port, Buckie is destined to become the leading commercial town in the county.

PORT GORDON is a village on the coast, about a mile W. from Buckie. Its inhabitants are exclusively occupied in fishing and the ship coasting trade; they employ stake and bag nets for the capture of salmon, which are here abundant, being in the immediate vicinage of Speymouth. A large quantity of corn was formerly shipped annually from this port. The harbour is commodious, and the greater part is built of Portland cement concrete, at the sole expense of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. A narrow rivulet separates this village from that of PORT TANNACHY. Population in 1881, 1,132.

PORTESSIE is a small coast village, about a mile E. from Buckie; it is of some consequence as a boat building and fishing station. Population in 1881, 1,061.

The parish of RATHVEN extends about 10 miles along the coast of the Moray Frith, by from three to five in breadth. The greater portion of the land is hilly, but the more level parts near the sea are arable and fertile, being greatly enriched by sea manure; and in some parts the eye is relieved by the appearance of thriving plantations. Throughout the district the supply of limestone, sandstone and slate is abundant, and the memorials of antiquity are numerous, the Danish "cairn" being the most general. Acreage, 23,165. The population of the entire parish of Rathven in 1881 was 11,140.

ENZIE is a quoad sacra parish, 22 miles W. of Banff. The parish is partly in Rathven and partly in Bellie. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and two Roman Catholic chapels are the places of worship. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,108.

CULLEN AND DESKFORD,

AND THE VILLAGES OF PORTKNOCKIE, FINDOCHTY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maritime town, and the capital of the parish of its name, 191 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Fochabers, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situated on a commanding eminence overlooking the Moray Frith. Formerly it consisted of two distinct towns—the New Town and the Old Town, but between 1820-30 the latter was wholly removed from its site adjacent to Cullen House to its present position, the church alone remaining. The town, which presents an aspect of neatness and respectability, is indebted to the Seafield family for many of its improvements. The Great North of Scotland (Buckie Extension) Railway passes through the burgh. To the west of the station the railway is carried over the town by a series of arches which terminate in a viaduct of eight arches between seventy and eighty feet high. The viaduct spans the mouth of Cullen burn, separating the parishes of Cullen and Rathven.

The Established church is a pre-Reformation building of much interest, with a history dating back upwards of six centuries. It contains numerous, ancient monuments and inscriptions in an excellent state of preservation. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches, the former built in 1844, and the latter in 1882. In 1876 a Board school was erected at a cost of £2,500. The curing of fish and its exportation is carried on by several of the inhabitants. There are also branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, a brewery, and two good hotels. The acting magistrates are the provost and two bailies, with a treasurer, dean of guild, and nine councillors. A justice of peace small debt court is held on the first Tuesday in every month. The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead in returning a member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq. Cullen House is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls; and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of eighty-four feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence, called Castle Hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength. An almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch. It is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. The ruins of Findlater Castle, a building of great antiquity, are situated about two miles E. of Cullen. Fairs are held on the third Friday in May, and the second Friday in November (new style.) In 1881 the entire parish of Cullen, the area of which is 831 acres, had a population of 2,236, and the town 2,033.

DESKFORD is a parish lying between Cullen and Grange, five miles in length by three in breadth. The ruins of Deskford Tower, the Castle of Inaltrie, and a pre-Reformation church are in this parish. The places of worship are a new parish church and a Free church, and in the village are good public schools. Acreage, 8,155. Population in 1881, 849.

PORTKNOCKIE is a fishing village within the royalty of Cullen, in the parish of Rathven, 2 miles W.N.W. from Cullen, and 4 miles E. from Portessie. It is situated on Moray Frith, and contains an Established church, erected in 1833, a Free church, and a public school. The district was erected into a quoad sacra parish, with the designation of Seafield Parish, in 1835. A deep water harbour was constructed in 1888. Population in 1881, 1,118.

FINDOCHTY is also a small fishing village in the same parish as Portknockie, 3 miles W. from Cullen. A harbour was a few years ago constructed here at a cost of £10,000. The places of worship are a United Presbyterian church and a Wesleyan chapel. There is also also a Board school in the parish. In the neighbourhood are the ruins of the Castle of Findochty, the ancient residence of the family of Ord. Population in 1881, 936.

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH,

GLENRINNES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUFFTOWN is a village, founded in 1817, and created a Burgh of Barony under the "General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act" in 1863, being the year after that Act became law. The village is in the parish of Mortlach, and is 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 52 N.W. of Aberdeen, 30 S.W. of Banff, 14 N.E. of Inveravon, 10 S.W. of Keith, and 6 S.W. of Aberlour, situated a short way to the north of the old decayed hamlet of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dullan and the Fiddoch waters. This place is rapidly improving in appearance, extent and population, under the auspices of its patrons, the Earl of Fife and the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the former having in 1881 carried out a thorough system of drainage at a cost of about £700. New streets are being opened up, and a large number of feus have been taken, several of which have been built upon. The village is formed with a square in its centre, from which streets diverge from each side. In the centre of the square stands a large square tower of considerable height, with four Gothic turrets on the corners, surmounted with a belfry containing one bell. It was formerly used as a gaol, and contains a good clock with four dials, which adds greatly to the appearance of the place. During the summer months it is much frequented by visitors, on account of its healthy situation and the beautiful scenery in and around its vicinity. There are two hotels, viz., the Fife Arms and the Commercial, the former of long standing. An extensive trade is carried on by the Tuniver and Richmond Lime Company, and there is a large distillery, of which Mr. George Cowie is the proprietor, also one of recent erection, the Glenfiddich Distillery, of which Mr. William Grant is the proprietor. There are two branch banks, viz., the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. A commodious Masonic Hall was built in 1887, which is also used for meetings, &c. A sheriff court for small debt cases is held four times a year, in January, April, July and October, as fixed by the sheriff. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, which is of very ancient date, a Free Church, an Episcopal church, a neat edifice pleasantly situated, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory gained over the Danes by Malcolm II., in 1010, which was fought a few hundred yards south-west of Balvenie Castle. The district also possesses the ruins of Auchindoun Castle, and Balvenie Castle, before mentioned. Cattle markets are held on the fourth Thursday of every month; harvest feeing, 11th of July; Whitsunday feeing, 23rd of May; and Martinmas feeing, 21st of November. Population in 1881, 2,934.

GLENRINNES is a quoad sacra parish, formed in 1855, and comprises part of Mortlach and part of Aberlour. There is an Established church, built in 1884, about the centre of the parish, 5¼ miles from Dufftown, and a good public school. The nearest station is at Dufftown. It is also a registration district. Population in 1881, 401.

INVERAVON,

BALLINDALLOCH, GLENLIVET AND DRUMIN.

INVERAVON is a parish on the banks of the river Avon, lying chiefly in Banffshire, a small portion being in the county of Elgin. It is about 42 miles S.W. of Banff, eight S.W. of Aberlour, 22 S.W. of Keith, 14 S. of Rothes, 22 S. by W. of Fochabers, and 22 S. of Elgin. Besides the Avon and the Spey, it is watered by the Livet. The surface is irregular, but cannot be described as mountainous, except the lofty region of Ben Rinnes, which is mostly in this parish, and abounds in grouse.

The district of GLENLIVET (formed a quoad sacra parish in 1865) is remarkably fertile, and noted for the excellence of whisky, for the manufacture of which there is a distillery, that of G. and J. G. Smith. There are also two other distilleries in the parish, viz. Cragganmore and Glenfarclas. The sides of the river are shaded with copses of birch and alder, and on the banks of the Spey there is a considerable extent of oak.

BALLINDALLOCH, the elegant mansion of Sir George M'Pherson Grant, D.L., J.P. is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Avon and Spey. A dilapidated castle is among the remains of antiquity. A church of the Establishment, a quoad sacra church at Glenlivet, a Free church, and two Roman Catholic chapels are the places of worship within the parish.

Fairs are held at Inveravon on the third Saturday in January, February, March, April, October and December, on the Tuesday before Whit-Sunday, third Tuesday in July, and the Tuesday before Martinmas; fairs are also held on the day before that on which Dufftown takes place. Acreage, 48,971. Population in 1881, 2,568.

KEITH,

BOTRIPHNIE, NEWMILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KEITH is a market and post town, and parish—the latter chiefly in the county of Banff, but extending into that of Moray. The town is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 S.W. of Banff, 17 E.S.E. of Elgin, 50 N.E. of Aberdeen, 50 E. of Inverness, 8 S.E. of Fochabers, 17 S.S.W. of Portsoy, and 12 S. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely—OLD KEITH, NEW KEITH, and FIFE KEITH—the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new. New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, feued off in tenements of fifteen yards by sixty. It is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the principal street there are many good shops and hotels. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of six centuries, and was at one time the county town. The Court of Registry possessed an extensive jurisdiction, including the four pleas of the Crown. The last criminal hanged was Gilbert Dallachy, condemned for theft, about 1690. On the banks of the Isla, a little below the town, are the ruins of a castle, which belonged to the Oliphant family. Tradition says that part of the castle was built overhanging a deep pool in the river at the foot of a small waterfall, into which this part fell. Further up the river is an old bridge, well worth a visit. Keith was noted for the great animal fair which lasted a week, about the middle of September. Traders from Glasgow and Dundee, and the south generally, were met there by all their customers from the northerly parts of the kingdom, including the Orkney Islands, to settle past and arrange future transactions. The number of horses and cattle was very great, and even yet the horse market in September is one of the largest in the north. The Suit-Roll-Croft on the banks of the Isla, near Keith, was the gathering place of the Clan Gordon; Suttrall House, Fife Keith, now marks the gathering place. Keith was the birth place of Ferguson, the astronomer. On the Caird's Hill, denoting the "hill of friends," are remains of a Druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glengarick, and Peter Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of freebooters, who, after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken prisoner, and his gang destroyed. The extensive manufactory belonging to Messrs. G. & G. Kynoch, for the manufacture of Scotch tweeds, gives employment to a considerable number of hands. In addition there are large flour, meal, and manure manufactories, an extensive distillery, and a brewery in the Old Town. Three branches of the respective establishments of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland, Bank, Limited, are in operation here, the latter having also a branch in Fife Keith.

The present Established church was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodious edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of eighteen hundred, and is considered one of the handsomest churches in the north of Scotland. The Episcopalians, a Free Church community, the United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics have each a place of worship. There is also a public reading room and library, in the former of which the principal daily papers and leading periodicals are taken, while the library contains a number of useful and instructive books; a chess room is attached to the reading room for members. A sheriff court, for small debt and debt recovery cases and for proofs in ordinary actions and other business, is held once a month in Longmore Hall. The monthly markets are held on the first Friday of every month, the stance for which is at the south end of the town, and is of considerable extent. In additon there are three feeing markets, in May and November, for the half yearly servants, and in July for the harvest servants. The parish, which embraces an area of 18,195 statute acres, contained in 1881 a population of 6,396; of this number 4,339 were returned for the town.

BOTRIPHNIE, a parish in Banffshire, and the seat of a presbytery is situated about 4 miles s. of Keith town; it extends across the whole county, from Aberdeenshire on the east to Elginshire on the west, having an average breadth of about three miles, and enclosing an area of 9,459 statute acres; the soil for the most part is arable, and generally speaking, fertile. Population in 1881, 696.

NEWMILL is a village in the parish of Keith, one mile from that town. A handsome church and manse in connection with the Establishment were built in 1870. Newmill with the neighbouring district was erected into a quoad sacra parish in 1877. It has also a Free Church mission hall. Population in 1881, 651.

MACDUFF,

GARDENSTOWN, CROVIE, DUBFORD, AND THE PARISH OF GAMRIE.

MACDUFF is a seaport town, in the parish of Gamrie, situated about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the sea-shore. This town, which is governed by a provost, bailies, council and police commissioners, has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the huttage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and trade. It is built on the property of the Earl of Fife, whose fine seat lies in the neighbourhood; and to a nobleman of this name it is indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity. Through his influence it was created a burgh of barony by George III., in 1783, when its name was altered from Doun to its present appellation. It has from that period increased in extent and consequence. It contains three churches, Board schools, and a school for poor children of both sexes—the latter called the "Murray Institution," from its having been founded by a Mr. Murray, of London, a canvas manufacturer, and a native of Macduff, in 1849. This school has been transferred to the School Board in virtue of a scheme made under the provision of the Educational Endowments (Scotland) Act, which also provides for the administration of the funds of the institution, which amount to about £6,000. A handsome town hall has been built by voluntary subscription, at a cost of £2,100. The church occupies a conspicuous position on the eminence, and Lord Fife has ornamented its precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same nobleman has munificently expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour, which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith. As a station for the herring fishery, it is exceedingly valuable, a great supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port. There are two branch banking establishments—the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. The greater portion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff is exported hence, as are salmon, cod and herring; and the country inland is supplied from here with coal, bone manure, and lime. Several vessels trade with London and the Baltic, the number of fishing boats is very considerable, and in the curing of fish there are some respectable establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and even lucrative employment. Population in 1881, 3,641.

GARDENSTOWN is also a small seaport village of very romantic appearance in the same parish, eight miles east of Banff, and fourteen west of Fraserburgh. Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, together with two schools, are in the village. The nearest station is at Macduff, seven miles distant. Population in 1881, 871.

The parish of GAMRIE extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half, and embraces an area of 17,041 acres. The coast is bold and precipitous and indented with caverns. The land is partly under tillage and partly in pasture. CROVIE is a small village in this parish, situated one mile east of Gardenstown. The inhabitants are principally engaged in fishing. Population of the whole parish in 1881, 6,786, of which 320 belonged to Crovie.

PORTSOY AND FORDYCE.

PORTSOY is a seaport in the parish of Fordyce, 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 82 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E.N.E. of Fochabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff, situated on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the Baron of Boyne, whose descendants, embracing the fortunes of the Pretender in 1715, forfeited their lands to the Crown. They were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in the possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but, as a port, it is in a thriving condition. The point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards 100 tons burthen. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been greatly extended of late years, it has a considerable trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal. Fish curing, distilling, and a manure manufactory are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its ports, has elevated Portsoy into a position of some consequence as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarries of this district (which has obtained the name of "Portsoy marble"), is a beautiful mixture of red, green, and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea cups, vases, and small ornaments, chimney-pieces, &c. Some singular specimens of schistus, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. This district also abounds with excellent limestone. The burgh is under the jurisdiction of a baron bailie and justices of the peace. The Dowager Countess of Seafield is superior. The extensive ruins of the old Castles of Boyne and Findlater, lying to the east and west of Portsoy, possess great attractions for the antiquary and pleasure seeker.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, erected in 1816, at a cost of £2,000, and restored in 1881, a Free church, built in 1844, at an expense of £1,800, and rebuilt in 1871; an Episcopal church, constructed in 1840, at an expenditure of £2,480; a United Presbyterian church, built in 1836, at a cost of £830; and a chapel for Roman Catholics, erected in 1828. Board schools were built in 1877, at a cost of £2,848, and in 1887 an additional sum of £497 was expended on them. There is a Young Men's Christian Association in the town, in connection with which is a library, available to the members free and to the community at a very low charge. The library contains about 1,600 volumes, the various departments being well represented. Population in 1881, 2,312.

The parish of FORDYCE is of great antiquity. The village is situated about 3 miles W. by S. from Portsoy. There are Established and Free churches in the village, the first-named built in 1806, and the latter in 1843. Large Board schools were erected in 1881-82 at an expense of £1,830, at which there are a number of bursaries in the gift of the Seafield family, tenable by boys for five years, with four years in addition at Aberdeen University. At what was formerly the old parochial school the late Sir James Clark, Bart., physician in ordinary to Her Majesty, and the late John Forbes, Esq., physician extraordinary to his late Royal Highness the Prince Consort, received the early part of their education. The most remarkable remnant of antiquity in the village is a large castellated building, standing on the east side of The Square, and bearing the date of 1592. It originally belonged to the Durn family, but is now the property of the house of Seafield. SANDEND is a small fishing village in this parish, situated about 3 miles W. of Portsoy. The nearest station is Glassaugh. Acreage of the parish, 17,198. Population in 1881, 4,289, of which the village contained 331, and Sandend 256.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland, and is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Roxburgh; on the north the range of Lammermoor hills separates it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, from which counties it is divided by the river Tweed. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west thirty-five miles, and from north to south twenty-two, and its area comprises 297,161 statute acres, or 464 square miles. In point of size Berwick ranks as the twentieth Scottish county, and in population as the twenty-fourth.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the period of the Roman invasion Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British, called Otadinii; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests by these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and in the course of time they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Saxonia, superseding its previous designation Bernicia. Until the year 1020, this district of country was included within the Kingdom of Northumberland; in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II. by Cospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century, many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears likewise, that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish and other foreign tradesmen; and it is recorded as a fact that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom in entering from England, Berwickshire suffered in the succeeding centuries in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham and Berwick, and the bridges across the Tweed were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of the town. From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwickshire underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognised in places more distant from the frontier. By their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularised, and, in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable burr which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife. The "Men of Merse" distinguished themselves at Flodden and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I. paid his first visit to Scotland, in the year 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, "gallantly arrayed" on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

SURFACE, SOIL, &C.—Berwickshire is divided into three districts, namely Merse, Lammermoor (or Lammermuir), and Lauderdale. The Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, occasionally giving name to the whole county, and embracing that tract of low land between the Lammermoor hills on the north and the river Tweed on the south, having Lauderdale for its western boundary. It is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties, and being well enclosed, and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from one of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect, and runs on the northern border of the Merse, so as effectually to divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed. But for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader water, along whose bank it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable; this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres. The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description; those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Soutra Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1, 544; Meikle-less Law, on the border of Haddingtonshire, 1,531; Tippet Knowes, 1,323; Dirrington Law, 1,309; and Twin Law, 1,260.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &C.—Within the last century very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian; the country is thickly but not redundantly populated with a most intelligent active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great or general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised, and freestone and whinstone of various kinds exist in several parts of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham, by an easy land carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural; the principal crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans and turnips, the latter being extensively cultivated. Manufactures as yet have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick. Paper is made at Chirnside Bridge, and the manufacture of woollens is carried on at Earlston and Cumledge. The herring fishery, which is pursued at Eyemouth and other parts, is also a profitable industry, as is also the curing of this fish.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences; it is not susceptible of navigation, but is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whitadder course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eyemouth. The Eden, which runs southwards from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of above forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder that no salmon can live in it; if any happen to enter they are said to die in a few days, though they are caught plentifully in the Whitadder, which also abounds with trout, &c. The principal lines of railway in this county are the North British and its many branches, and the North-Eastern. The northern extremity of the North-Eastern Railway is at Berwick; and here the magnificent Tweed viaduct connects that line with the North British, and forms with other railways an uninterrupted communication from London to Aberdeen.—See the town of BERWICK for a more detailed account of the viaduct.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATION.—Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, Lauder, which until the passing of the Redistribution Bill joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, and Jedburgh in returning one member to the Senate, but was then merged in the county. Berwick-on-Tweed, which is a municipal burgh, and formerly sent two representatives to Parliament, is not classed as an integral portion of the shire, and when the bill above alluded to was passed, the town was included in the Berwick-on-Tweed division of Northumberland. The present member for the county is the Right Hon. Edward Marjoribanks. The parliamentary constituency for 1887-88 was 5,804. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Home. By the returns presented to Government in 1871, the entire county of Berwick contained a population of 36,486, and by those for 1881, 35,392. The valuation of the county for 1887-88 was (exclusive of railways) £313,289, and the valuation of railways, £19,857.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED,

ANCROFT, NORHAM, SCREMERSTON, SPITTAL, TWEEDMOUTH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England), is a corporate borough and seaport, 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant S.E. 58 miles (by rail), and from Glasgow E. by S. 103. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Teutonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its establishment is obscure. Maitland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note of the same name in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and towns on the continent of America; others, and among them Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Barwica, signifying "a village belonging to a manor;" while a third party, with more feasibility, derive it from bar and wick, "a castle on the bend of a river." Berwick was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It stands on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that stream empties itself into Berwick bay. Prior to the year 1551, Berwick was alternately in the hands of the English and Scotch, but it was then erected into a free burgh or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom, having a small district attached to it, called "Berwick bounds," stretching about three miles north, and the like distance up the Tweed. It may be added that it is described as a large and populous town so early as the reign of David I. of Scotland. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king Gregory, contemporary with Alfred the Great, took it by assault. Malcolm of Scotland having defeated the Northumbrians in the year 1018, became possessed of all the Lothians down to the Tweed, after which time Berwick remained in Scotch hands till 1296, when it was re-taken by Edward I. During this period it rose to be a town of the greatest importance, being second only to London. About the year 1098 Berwick was annexed to the see of Durham by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flambert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I. of Scotland, who in 1147 had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland, and as a security he was forced to deliver up the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291 the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I., assembled at Berwick to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Baliol to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th November, in the following year, the king appointed John Baliol successor to the crown.

The town is surrounded by regular fortifications, the old line of which extended 2 miles 282 yards; the present walls, built in the time of Queen Elizabeth, are only about one mile and a third in length, and at the present time form an excellent promenade entirely round the town. Berwick was formerly the principal town of the kingdom of Merse; it stands on a gentle declivity at a short distance from the sea; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side. The ancient castle, of which there are only a few remains, must have been of great strength, and is now merely an attractive object to the antiquary. Berwick, in modern days, is of considerable consequence. It is a regular, well-built town, joined to England by a fine bridge of hewn stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the whole length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width is 17 feet. It was commenced in 1610, in the reign of James I., and finished in 1634, in the reign of Charles I., at a cost of £15,000—a heavy sum at that period. About a quarter of a mile higher up the river is the railway viaduct, known as the "Royal Border Bridge," opened by Her Majesty and the late Prince Albert on the 29th August 1850. This magnificent structure spans the broad valley of the Tweed, and completes an important link in the chain of railway communication between London and Edinburgh by the north-east coast. It forms the northern extremity of the North-Eastern Railway; and in magnitude of construction and grandeur of design is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable architectural achievements of modern times. The foundation stone of this noble structure was laid on the 15th of May, 1847, without any public ceremony. The viaduct consists of 28 circular arches, each 61 feet 6 inches span, springing from lofty piers 8 feet 6 inches broad at the narrowest point. One half of the arches span the river—here a broad and beautiful stream—and the remainder are built on the neighbouring land south of the Tweed. The total length of the bridge is 2,160 feet, and its greatest height from the bed of the river 126 feet 6 inches, including the parapets; its breadth between the parapets is 24 feet, allowing a double line of rails to be laid. The viaduct is built entirely of stone, with the exception of the inner part of the arches, which is brick laid in cement. There are about one million and a half cubic feet of masonry in the structure, and two millions and a half of bricks have been placed in the arches. The design of the bridge is elegant, and the parapets are adorned on the outside by miniature corbelled arches. The piers of the bridge, which are protected by handsome cutwaters, are curved up perpendicularly, and are narrowed near the spring of the arch by means of offsets. The parapets and springs of the arches are of polished stone, but the rest of the masonry is only rough-hewn. The appearance of the arches is extremely graceful. When one-half of the arches had been erected, it was considered desirable for the accommodation of the traffic to erect a temporary bridge across the river, without waiting the completion of the stone viaduct, so as to avoid the uncertainty of the river operations. The quantity of timber used in the construction of the stone and timber bridges was not less than 300,000 cubic feet. The large embankment at the south end of the bridge, five-eighths of a mile in length, and in some places 60 feet high, completes the junction of the Tweedmouth with the Berwick station. The entire cost of the viaduct, amounting to about £120,000, was borne by the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway Company, now the North-Eastern. The Tweed viaduct is one of the largest stone viaducts in the kingdom. The last arch of this magnificent bridge was keyed on the 26th March, 1850, by the wife of the resident engineer. The greatest depth of the water at high tide is 23 feet. The pier, the construction of which was finished in 1810, at a cost of £40,000, is worthy of note; it stretches a great distance into the sea and forms a fine breakwater, the lighthouse being situate at the extreme end; the pier affords a fine and salubrious promenade.

The country round here is generally flat, but well suited to agricultural purposes, and some fine views are to be obtained about the town and district. The exportation of coal from the mines in the neighbourhood forms an important feature in the commerce of the port, while that of grain, manure, and salmon caught in the Tweed (the latter sent to the London markets), is nearly equally profitable. The principal fishing stations are from the mouth of the river to Norham, a distance of seven miles. The season commences on the 15th February, and terminates on the 14th September. The port has the privilege of the Warehousing Act, passed the 6th of George IV., and is now a bonded port for the reception of wines and colonial produce. Five newspapers are published here, viz.:—the Berwick Advertiser, the Border Counties Gazette, and Berwickshire Gazette on Friday; the Berwick Journal on Thursday, and the Berwickshire News on Tuesday. There are four branch banks, viz.: Messrs. Woods & Co. and the North-Eastern (late Alnwick and County), in Hide hill; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, at the Bridge end; and the British Linen Co. Bank, in Sandgate; the Berwick and Tweedmouth Savings Bank also has an office here. The Town Hall, in the High street, is an imposing building of commanding appearance; the spire is 150 feet in height, in which there is a clock and a peal of eight bells. The old custom of ringing the curfew is still continued here, and at eight every evening it is rung at the Town Hall. Another remnant of a by-gone age is the old stocks by the side of the Town Hall steps. The Corn Exchange, in Sandgate, is a large and commodious building, erected by a limited liability company, and was opened in June, 1858. Besides being well suited for the purpose for which it was built, it is also available for meetings, entertainments, &c. It is well lighted and heated, and will accommodate 1,500 persons. The Queen's Rooms, in Hide hill, erected by Mr. J. D. Purves, in 1880, are also used for meetings, entertainments, &c. The large hall with gallery will accommodate 1,000 persons. The Institute, in High street, is a very substantial building, erected in 1881, at a cost of £2,000. It contains reading rooms, museum of natural history of the district, and a school of art. The Masonic Hall, situate on the Parade, and erected in 1873, is also a handsome stone building, and considerably improves this part of the town. The other public erections are the Barracks, the Infirmary, the Union Workhouse, and a Templars' Hall. There are three good hotels—the King's Arms, in Hide hill, the Red Lion, in High street, and the Station Hotel, by the North-Eastern station, Tweedmouth, all of which are complete and comfortable establishments.

The borough, previous to the operation of the Municipal Reform Act, was governed by a charter granted by James I. The last enactment vested the government in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, with a recorder and the usual assistant officers, under the style of the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed;" the same Act divided the borough into three wards, and provided it with a commission of the peace; there is also a sheriff. Sessions are held quarterly, presided over by the Recorder, W. T. Greenhow, Esq.; the corporation, as lords of the manor, hold courts leet and baron twice in the year, and Berwick is included in the first circuit of county court towns under the acts for the recovery of debts. The limits of the borough are defined by the Boundary Act to comprise the parish of Berwick and the respective townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal. The borough was first represented in the English Parliament in the reigh of Henry VIII., and from that time (1529), it continued to send two members, until the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, when it was included in the Berwick-upon-Tweed division of Northumberland (population, 55,847), which extends from Felton on the south to Berwick on the north, taking in the whole of the coast from the Coquet to the Tweed, being bounded by the limits of the county on the west. It contains the petty-sessional divisions of Bamburgh, Coquetdale North, Glendale, Norhamshire and Islandshire, Coquetdale East (except the parishes of Gloster Hill, Morwick, Acklington, Acklington Park, Amble, Hauxley, Warkworth and Tongstone), and the municipal borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed.

The parish church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a flat-roofed Gothic pile, begun in 1648, and finished in 1652; from being destitute of either tower or spire, it has a rather singular appearance, but in the days of the Commonwealth these were deemed unnecessary ornaments. The benefice is a vicarage. Since the public cemetery in the North road was opened, it is only in rare cases that interments are allowed in the churchyard. St. Mary's church, Castlegate, is a neat stone edifice, erected in 1858, at the expense of the late Captain George Gordon. The living is a vicarage. The other places of worship consist of one edifice in connection with the Church of Scotland; three churches of the Presbyterian Church of England, the church in Wallace green being a very fine building, built at an expense of nearly £6,000; one United Presbyterian church, a Wesleyan, a Primitive Methodist, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The educational establishments of Berwick are the Grammar School, the Coporation Academy (for the children of freemen solely, the salarie s of the rector and teacher and all other expenses being paid by the Corporation), two National schools for boys, one for girls, and one for infants, a British mixed school, and a Roman Catholic school; besides these there are a few private schools.

The weekly market is on Saturday, and one for fat cattle every alternate Monday; this latter market was formerly held at Hide hill, but owing to the great inconvenience caused to the general traffic, it was transferred in 1886 to a more suitable position in Castlegate. A fair is held on the last Friday in May for horses and cattle, and there are statutes or "hirings" for servants on the first Saturdays in March and May. The population of the municipal and local board district was in 1871, 13,282, and in 1881, 13,995, showing an increase in the ten years of 713.

TWEEDMOUTH is a populous parish, now forming part of the borough of Berwick. It is situated at the south end of the bridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. The North-Eastern station is situated at the eastern end of the town. The inhabitants are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and the other branches of trade, exports and imports, are of the like nature with those of Berwick. Works for the manufacture of agricultural implements, and engineering and boiler works, provide employment for a fair proportion of the inhabitants; water works for the supply of Berwick are also situated here. The Corporation of Berwick are lords of the manor of Tweedmouth. There is a large public cemetery here. A new dock was opened on the 4th October, 1876; it admits vessels up to 500 tons burthen, and has an area of 3½ acres, and a depth of 21ft.; the cost of construction was about £35,000. There is railway communication from Tweedmouth station to the dock, by the North-Eastern Railway Co. The places of worship are the parish church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew (the living of which is a vicarage), an English Presbyterian church, and one connected with the Church of Scotland. Population in 1881, 5,420.

SPITTAL, a populous village in the parish of Tweedmouth, about three-quarters of a mile from Berwick, is situated at the mouth of the river. The curing of herrings is carried on, and there are also a manufactory of spades and shovels, and the extensive manure works of Messrs. Johnson & Co. and James R. Black & Co. Limited. The gas works for the borough are situate here. Many good houses have been built for the accommodation of visitors, who resort hither for sea-bathing. There is also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain iron, lime, magnesia, and sulphate of soda. The places of worship are an Established Church of England, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; a Presbyterian Church of England, and a Baptist chapel. There are also a British school and a National school. ORD is a township in the parish of Tweedmouth.

ANCROFT is a village and parish in the county of Northumberland, five and a half miles S.W. from Berwick. The village of Ancroft (or St. Ann's Croft, as it was formerly called) was at one time of much greater extent, but being visited by the plague in 1666, it was destroyed by fire, by order of the Government; the foundations of many houses are found in the adjacent fields. The church of St. Ann (from which the place derives its name), is a very ancient edifice, and was originally founded in 1092. It was in the time of the Edwards converted into a peel tower for the protection of the inhabitants against the Scotch. The living is a vicarage. There is also a place of worship for English Presbyterians. There is a National school and a Presbyterian school at Ancroft Moor. CHESWICK is a hamlet in this parish. GOSWICK, a small township and hamlet previously belonging to Holy Island parish, was in March, 1887, transferred for civil purposes to the parish of Ancroft. Population in 1881, 1,522.

SCREMERSTON is a scattered village in the county of Northumberland, three and a half miles S.S.E. from Berwick, its post town. Here are the extensive collieries, lime and brick works of the Scremerston and Shoreswood Coal Co. There is an Established church, dedicated to St. Peter, and a National school here.

NORHAM is a populous village in the parish of its name, on the south bank of the Tweed, in the county of Northumberland, situated seven and a half miles S.W. from Berwick. It consists chiefly of one long wide street, with a green in the centre, on which stands a cross. The houses are well built and very respectable, and the land around is very productive and well cultivated. There is a station on the Kelso branch of the North-Eastern Railway, about three-quarters of a mile from the village, and also a station at Velvet Hall on the same branch, for the convenience of the district; it is situate about midway between Berwick and Norham. A bridge crossing the Tweed connects it with Berwickshire, and at Horncliffe the river is also spanned by a very neat suspension bridge. The ancient castle of Norham stands on an eminence a short distance from the village; the extent of the ruins shows that the fortress had formerly been of great strength and importance. The tower is still standing, though much dilapidated, and consists of four storeys, 70 feet high, with many vaults or prisons, which are yet entire. The grounds surrounding it are cultivated as a market garden. The ruins have within recent years been repaired, with a view to their preservation. The church, a fine Norman structure, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is very ancient, the orignal one being built in 840; the middle aisle is the only portion of that remaining; the church had anciently the privilege of sanctuary for thirty-seven days. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. There are also places of worship for the Free Church, Presbyterian, and Primitive Methodist denominations. There is a National school in the village. FELKINGTON, GRINDON, HORNCLIFFE, LOAN END, LONGRIDGE, NORHAM MAINS, SHORESWOOD, THORNTON and TWIZEL are townships in this parish. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,682, and the village 920 of that number.

CHIRNSIDE,

CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE AND ALLANTON.

CHIRNSIDE is a parish of 5,553 acres, lying in the eastern part of the Merse, on the northern side of the Whitadder, and extending four miles in length, by about three in breadth. The village is 50 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 13½ N.N.E. from Greenlaw, 9 N.W. from Berwick, and 6 N. from Duns. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The upper part of the village is now greatly improved by the erection of several good stone houses. There is an excellent supply of water brought from about a mile distant. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a United Presbyterian church, and a Free church. From the hill on which the village is situated a fine view of many miles of fertile and well cultivated country, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats, is obtained, the view to the south being bounded by the Cheviot hills. The estate of Ninewells, the family seat of the Humes, is in this neighbourhood, and David Hume, the celebrated historian, though born in Edinburgh, was from his infancy brought up in this parish, which may therefore proudly claim him as its own; the mansion is at present occupied by the Hon. Edward Majoribanks, M.P. Some vestiges of ancient encampments are discernible in this district. Population of Chirnside parish in 1881, 1,516, and of the village, 939.

Less than a mile west of the village is the pretty rural hamlet of CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE, where a good bridge crosses the Whitadder, and over which also the railway is carried by means of another bridge, a handsome structure of stone. Upon the banks of the river a species of gypsum is found, and in other parts of the district abundance of marl is obtained.

At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village, in the parish of Edrom, one mile and a half S. from Chirnside and 7 N.E. from Duns, two rivers—the Blackadder and the Whitadder—unite, and a neat stone bridge crosses the mingled streams. Blackadder House, the seat of Sir George Lauderdale Houstoun Boswall, is in the centre of the village.

POST OFFICE, CHIRNSIDE, Margaret Ireland, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive at 8 15 and 10 a.m. and 6 50 p.m., and are despatched at 7 30 a.m. and 1 10 and 5 20 p. m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

COCKBURNSPATH

IS a parish of 12,652 acres, on the sea coast, the village being 35½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Duns, 8 S.E. from Dunbar, and 21 N.W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last named towns, and on the line of the North British Railway. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea; behind the cliffs the ground rises gently towards the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines, whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure; but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the torrentous course of the Pease burn, is thrown "The Peaths," or Pease bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson in 1786. It is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease burn, which flows beneath, three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon as a masterpiece of architecture. In former days it was understood to be one of the highest bridges in the world, and is consequently an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile west of the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the "old tower." As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indelible proofs of military operations of former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united with this parish are still standing. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church at STOCKBRIDGE, about a mile south of the village, are the present places of worship. There is also a very handsome school house. A public hall capable of seating two hundred persons was erected by subscription in 1883-4. This place would no doubt become a favourite resort of summer visitors were more accommodation provided. The small fishing village of FISHER'S COVE, about a mile to the north of Cockburnspath, consisting of some fifteen or twenty houses, is picturesquely situated on the shore, and on the way down to the small boat harbour is a curious tunnelled passage, with branching caves extending a considerable way into the rock. This village suffered terrible disaster in the storm of October, 1881, when of the twenty-one fishermen that put to sea in the morning eleven perished, since which time the staple industry has been somewhat crippled. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,130.

COLDINGHAM

IS a parish of 24,021 acres, ten miles in length, and five in breadth, lying on the coast of Berwickshire, having on its north and east sides the German Ocean. The village, a burgh of barony, is 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 21 N.N.E. of Greenlaw, 17 S.E. of Dunbar, 13 N.N.E. of Duns, 11 N.N.W. of Berwick, and 4 from Ayton. It is charmingly seated upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, a short distance from the sea, near to St. Abb's Head, a noted point of land projecting into the sea. A lighthouse was in 1862 erected on this point, and latterly a fog signal. Its antiquity is unquestionably great, for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain, under the Roman sway, and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Coldingham Loch; it is of a triangular figure, upwards of a mile in circumference, and 250 feet above the level of the sea, covering about thirty acres. On the top of Ernsheugh, 440 yards north of the loch, are the ruins of two oblong British camps, called the Tunlaw, i.e., Townlaw, in order to distinguish them from other camps beyond Moorburn, called Outlaw, i.e., Outerlaw. On the south side of the town are the ruins of the once magnificent and well-endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration. All that now remains of it is the east gable and north side (which form part of the modern parish kirk), with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory. At one time this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell, according to tradition, was carried off to Durham. So early as the seventh century a nunnery was settled here, but of what order is unknown, in which St. Ebba, the daughter and sister of kings, became abbess in 670. The history of no religious house would throw so much light on the bloody scenes and misgovernment of Scotland, from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century as this priory, with its history carefully written. The church was considerably altered and restored in 1857, and will seat over 500 worshippers. Fast Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as Wolf's Craig, in the novel of the "Bride of Lammermoor." The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre. The volunteers having been disbanded, the hall formerly used by them is now let for meetings, entertainments, &c. The village has been much resorted to within late years by sea-bathers; the scarcity of suitable accommodation and distance from the railway being, however, a drawback. At Coldingham Shore, about a mile distant, herring fishing is carried on, and a new harbour is now (1888) being made for the protection of the boats engaged in this industry. The population of the parish of Coldingham was in 1881, 3,159.

COLDSTREAM,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ECCLES, BIRGHAM, LEITHOLM, CORNHILL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COLDSTREAM is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of that name. The parish was anciently called LENNEL, but it is a matter of uncertainty when the name was changed, as it appears from many old charters that it was so called in the 11th and 12th centuries. The town is 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.S.W. from Berwick, 10 S.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Duns, and 9 N.E. from Kelso, situated on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river. By this passage Edward I. entered Scotland, with his forces, in 1296; and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies. It was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is crossed at this place by a strong bridge of free-stone, erected in 1766, at a cost of about £7,000, John Smeaton being the engineer. It consists of seven arches, including two for abutments, and is 305 feet long and 25 feet wide. In 1830 it underwent a thorough repair at a cost of about £2,000. It is placed at a distance of a furlong from the east end of the town, and from this spot a very delightful view up and down the woody banks of the river presents itself. This neighbourhood is the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem "Marmion." The town is irregularly built, quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England, while its border situation at one time rendered it eligible to participate with Gretna Green in the clandestine matrimonial trade. During the winter season Coldstream is much resorted to by the nobility and gentry for foxhunting; the Duke of Buccleuch's and the Berwickshire and East Lothian packs meet regularly in the neighbourhood. The town is governed by commissioners of police for the burgh. Justice of peace courts are held as occasion requires and sheriff small debt courts four times a year. The trade here is not extensive, no manufactures being carried on in this locality. Two proprietary banking establishments have branches here, and there is a good inn. A Mechanics' Institution, erected in High street, in 1863, at a cost of £1,200, contains a large lecture room, library, reading rooms, &c.; the funds for the erection were raised partly by subscriptions and donations. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a meeting house for the Catholic Apostolic community. At the east end of town, erected by the friends of the late Charles Marjoribanks, Esq., M.P. for Berwickshire, is a handsome memorial to record the successful result of the contested election for the county in 1852. In 1852 Sir John Marjoribanks, Bart., of Lees, had powerful hydraulic machinery erected within his grounds, by means of which water is forced up from the Tweed into a large tank on the top of the stable tower, from whence the town is supplied. In connection with the waterworks is a neat fountain, situated in the centre of the market place, erected by the same gentleman. In recognition of this public boon, a handsome obelisk was erected near the church by the inhabitants in honour of the donor, with an inscription commemorative of the event. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the Restoration. During the winter of 1659-60 he raised here a regiment, which was then, and has ever since been, denominated "The Coldstream Guards." Previous to the Reformation this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. The weekly market, formerly held on Thursday, is now discontinued. The parish contains 8,320 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,561, the town containing 1,616 of that number.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of that name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed. It contains about 12,418 acres. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil rich, and the grounds are well enclosed. There was once a nunnery of great magnitude and repute in the parish; this religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. "Deadriggs," on Crosshall Farm, in this district, was formerly the scene of a deperate battle, and a stone which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground is said to mark the grave of one of the Percys who fell in the contest. At BIRGHAM and LEITHOLM, two small villages, the principal retail business of the parish is carried on. The parish in 1881 contained a population of 1,546.

CORNHILL is neat small village in the parish of its name. Formerly it was a part of North Durham, from which it was separated by Act of Parliament in 1844, and united with the county of Northumberland; it is situated one and a half miles from Coldstream. Coldstream station, on the Kelso branch of the North-Eastern railway, is situated here, and in September, 1887, a new branch to Alnwick was opened for traffic. The soil of the parish is rich and fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, formerly a chapel of ease to Norham, is a neat structure in the early English style. It was first erected, probably, in 1082, but was rendered a distinct benefice in 1730. The living is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, From the rectory a beautiful view of the Tweed presents itself, and in the distance may be seen the celebrated Flodden Field. There is a commodious inn in the village called the Collingwood Arms, where every accommodation can be had. Fairs are held on the first Monday in March (for hiring), and auction sales for cattle, sheep, &c., are also held every alternate Monday. Population in 1881, 688.

CRANSHAWS,

ABBEY SAINT BATHANS, BUNKLE WITH PRESTON, ELLEMFORD, AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small thinly populated parish, of about 8,708 acres, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about 30 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S.E. from Haddington, and about 12 N.W. from Duns. The old castle of Cranshaws is an ancient edifice of great strength, and still entire. The remains of many encampments show, what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife. In 1881 Cranshaws had a population of 106.

The parish of ABBEY SAINT BATHANS is seven miles from Duns, also situated in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whitadder fertile and well cultivated; but the hilly district is barren and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to St. Bathan by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish. Edwin's or Wodin's, about a mile below St. Bathans, on the Whitadder, consists of three concentric circles of stone, seven and ten feet distant from each other. The diameter of the innermost circle is about 20 feet. The parish has an area of 4,797 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 250.

BUNKLE and PRESTON is a united parish forming a square of nearly six miles, and containing 9,189 acres. The soil on the high lands towards the Lammermoor hills was at one time thin, dry and poor; but by the application of lime and marl it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whitadder, is a fertile loam, and well cultivated. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the lands in the parish of Bonkill (then so called) were in the possession of a family of the same name; in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonkill is frequently noticed. One of his female descendants, marrying Sir John Steward, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title in 1377 merged into the family of Douglas, and they, in addition to the title of Earls of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonkill. Population in 1881, 726.

LONGFORMACUS parish, likewise in the Lammermoor district, is hilly, and for the most part pastoral, but the low grounds are well cultivated; it is about 12 miles in length, and six in breadth, and contains 19,532 acres. The village which is about seven miles S. from Duns, has been improved by the erection of several neat cottages, a school, and a residence for the master. An Established church and one for a Free Congregation are the places of worship. Two strikingly fine conical hills, called the "Derrington Laws," rise in this parish, and form conspicuous objects in the distance. ELLEMFORD, three miles from Longformacus, is in the same parish, and is much frequented in the summer season by anglers and sportsmen. Population in 1881, 385.

POST RECEIVING HOUSE at Mrs. Ewart's, CRANSHAWS.—Letters arrive (by messenger from Duns to Longformacus) about 1 p.m., and are despatched at 1 40 p.m.

DUNS, OR DUNSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CUMLEDGE, EDROM, GAVINTON IN LANGTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNS, or DUNSE, is a burgh of barony, and the largest town in the shire (Berwick not being taken in as strictly belonging to the county); it is 45 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 S.W. from Ayton, and 8 N.N.E. from Greenlaw. It has a station on the North British line from Reston to St. Boswells, situated about half a mile on the east side of the town. It lies nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plain, under the southern skirts of Duns Law, upon which hill the old town of Duns stood previous to its being burnt down. Its present position is at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whitadder running by it. This river, which produces the finest trout, affords ample sport to the angler. Duns Law, which rises to the height of about five hundred feet at the back of the town, is remarkable in the religious history of Scotland. On the 6th of June, 1639, when Charles I. with his army lay encamped at a place called the Birks, on the opposite side of the Tweed, with the intention of reducing the Covenanters, a Scottish covenanted army of seventy thousand men, under General Leslie, took up their position here, to defend the country from invasion. The army had a battery of forty cannon, on the brow of the hill, pointing in the direction of the king's camp. After lying in this position for three weeks, Charles I. was induced by their threatening attitude to enter into a treaty, in virtue of which the two armies were dissolved. The scenery from Duns Law may be classed as beautiful, and would well repay a short sojourn in the town by the tourist or visitor.

Duns is a place of great antiquity, but from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English before the accession of James to the throne of England. On one of these occasions the town records were burnt, so that no account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The present town is generally well built, the streets, lighted with gas, containing a few well furnished shops. It is abundantly supplied with water, and there are two hotels, viz., the White Swan and the Black Bull. There are several good villas in the suburbs, which give the town an improving appearance, and in the town are three branch banking houses. The other principal businesses may be comprised in a brewery, corn mills, a rope walk, and the grain trade. Duns in a commercial point of view may be considered to be declining, from the fact that the population is decreasing; the weekly market held on Tuesday, and formerly well attended, is now nearly extinct, and the grain trade has also fallen off to a large extent. The fairs for sheep, cattle, &c., all of which were well known, may now be said to be nearly if not quite obsolete. A sale by auction is held every alternate Monday for cattle, by Messrs. R. G. & W. B. Swan, and is well attended. A fair for hiring servants is held the first Tuesday in March, and single hirings are held on the first Tuesday in May and November. The town is governed by a chief magistrate and commissioners under the General Police and Improvement Act, 1862; the feuars manage, by a council of nine, the property vested in them. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff's court eight times in the year, viz., the last Friday in January, February, March, May, June and November, the second Friday in July, and the first Friday in October, at both of which debt claims of limited amount are adjudicated. A civil court is also held every Friday, except during the vacations, which are arranged by the sheriff. The Town Hall, a fine Gothic building, standing in the centre of the market place, was originally founded by the Earl of Moray, but the present edifice was erected in 1816, by the feuars, assisted by subscriptions. There is a Corn Exchange and a fine structure called the County buildings, in Newtown street, where the courts are held, and which also contains the police station. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologist, Joannes Duns Scotus, was born here in 1274, and died at Cologne in 1308. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State" and other works, Abraham Robertson, LL.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford, and Thomas M'Crie, D.D., in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. Duns Castle, a fine modern mansion, in the castellated style, stands about half a mile north-west of the town. The ancient edifice was the stronghold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and co-patriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William James Hay, Esq., and the interior decorations of the house and the paintings with which it is embellished, render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. Duns Castle was originally built in the year 1320, by the celebrated Earl of Moray; it was restored and considerable additions made to it in 1820, by its then proprietor, Colonel Hay. Among the paintings in Duns Castle are many saved from the Seton gallery. In particular the well known family group representing the sixth Lord Seton, the attached friend of Queen Mary, surrounded by his family, as also several portraits of the Stuarts, presented by the exiled Royal Family to an ancestor of Mr. Hay. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, three belonging to the United Presbyterians, an Episcopalian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish church was burnt down in February, 1879, but was rebuilt on a larger scale by the heritors of the parish, at a cost of upwards of £4,000; many improvements were also effected in the internal arrangements, and in December, 1880, it was re-opened for public worship. The parish of Duns, which contains about 11,396 acres, had in 1881 a population of 3,353, the town comprising 2,437 of that number.

At CUMLEDGE, about two miles north from Duns, there is a large steam and water mill, for the manufacture of blankets and plaidings. The mill was erected about thirty years ago by Mr. William Laidlaw, its present enterprising and spirited proprietor, and it employs about one hundred hands. It is the largest blanket manufactory in this part of Scotland.

EDROM is a parish and village, the latter about 3½ miles E. from Duns, situated near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whitadder. About half a mile from the village is a station on the Berwick and St. Boswells branch of the North British line. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length by six in breadth, and contains about 9,545 acres, is watered by the Blackadder and Whitadder streams. Duns Spa, once celebrated for its mineral properties, is on the borders of this parish. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn. There is an Established church and a Board school here. The parish of Edrom (which also contains the village of ALLANTON, given with Chirnside), contained in 1881 a population of 1,514.

LANGTON is a parish comprising the village of GAVINTON, the latter situated 2 miles S.W. from Duns, and half a mile S. of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is neat and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton; it now includes the whole parish, and belongs to the Hon. Major Robert Baillie Hamilton. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton Wood, but for the last century the family have resided at the mansion here; Langton House, which has been rebuilt on a palatial scale, is in the baronial style of architecture. In a small chapel in Langton Wood, between the years 1670 and 1689, the Presbyterians used to assemble for worship, and it was in this humble and secluded temple that Veitch and some other eminent divines occasionally preached. After the latter period it was used for a short time by the Episcopalians, after which it fell into decay, and not a trace of the building now remains. Upon the top of the hill called Raecleaughead are the vestiges of an ancient British camp. The parish church of Langton, situate at Gavinton, was restored in 1873, at a cost of about £2,000. It is beautifully situated on an eminence, and the tower and spire can be seen from a long distance. There is also a Free church and a Board school in the village, the latter erected in 1874. The acreage of the parish of Langton is about 7,139, and the population in 1881 was 505.

EARLSTON,

LEGERWOOD, REDPATH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EARLSTON (anciently Ercildoun) is a parish and village, the latter 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 11 W. by N. from Kelso, 18 S.W. from Duns, 15 N. from Jedburgh, 10 S.W. from Greenlaw, 8½ N.E. from Galashiels, and 7 S. from Lauder. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. At one time the trade of the village and its neighbourhood was confined to weaving certain fabrics for the Glasgow houses, but now the manufacturing of woollens and ginghams is carried on, the latter having never been equalled for excellence of quality. At the west end of the village, situated on the bank of the Leader, may be seen the ruins of an old tower, which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmouth, commonly called "the Rhymer," who flourished in the thirteenth century. A stone in the wall of the church bears the following inscription in ancient characters, "Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place." Cowden Knowles, the residence of Colonel Charles Hope, J.P., is an ancient building, standing on the side of a hill, the locality of which is famous in Scottish song. There are two fairs—on the 29th of June and the third Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, and a cattle and sheep market every alternate Monday, also a corn market weekly during the winter, and every alternate Monday during the summer. REDPATH is a village in this parish. The parish of Earlston has an area of 9,968 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,767, the village having 1,010 of this number.

LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad, and contains about 8,789 acres. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers, and is adapted, in general, both for crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is three miles N. from Earlston, situate on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Lauderdale. BOONHILL, in this parish was a signal station during the time of war. Population in 1881, 549.

EYEMOUTH,

AYTON, BURNMOUTH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little seaport and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, 50 miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S.E. from Dunbar, 20 miles N. from Coldstream, 13½ N.E. from Duns, eight N. from Berwick, and three from Ayton station on the North British Railway. It lies at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. The port is a very ancient one, being known as such as early as the reign of Alexander II., when it was resorted to by the monks of that age as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c., in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven secure from all winds, except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected up the Frith of Forth; and the port is occasionally frequented by wind bound vessels. The herring fishery is a source of profitable employment to the greater part of the inhabitants, there being 96 boats regularly employed during the season. This number is, however, frequently largely supplemented by boats from other parts, the total number engaged in this industry being as high as 132. In October, 1881, 43 large boats were employed at the white winter fishing, but in the terrible storm on the 14th of that month, when 129 lives were lost from this port alone, the number of boats was reduced to 28. The annual produce of the fishing now amounts to about £40,000. The trustees of the harbour obtained the sum of £25,000 from the Public Works Loan Commissioners to accelerate the long desired improvements of the harbour, the works in connection with which were completed in 1887, but unfortunately have disappointed the expectations formed of them and are not as useful and convenient as was hoped. In addition to the above a railway company has been formed, styled the Eyemouth Railway Company, with a capital of £30,000 in 3,000 shares of £10 each. The company is formed for the purpose of constructing a line from Eyemouth to Burnmouth, connecting it with the North British system. The scheme has not, however, received as yet sufficient pecuniary support to encourage its promoters to commence the necessary operations. Eyemouth was a great depot for smugglers; it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the preventive service, together with a judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long since destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, an Evangelical Union church, and chapels for Primitive Methodists and United Presbyterians are the places of worship. A handsome school was erected in 1876. The St. Abb's Lodge of Master Masons and the Land o' Cakes Royal Arch Chapter hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge room formed in 1757; it was in this room that Burns, the poet, was made a Royal Arch Mason. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays of June and October. The parish of Eyemouth, which embraces an area of 1,004 statute acres, contained in 1881 a population of 2,935, the burgh having 2,825, and landward 110.

AYTON is a parish and village, the latter 2½ miles from Eyemouth, and 8 N.W. from Berwick, occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the main line of railway between Edinburgh and the South. The parish contains about 6,699 acres, and describes an area of about 4 miles each way, including about 2 miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky; more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. A church, the foundation stone of which was laid September 8th, 1864, was erected near to the old one, which for many years past had been falling into decay. It is in the English Gothic style of the 14th century, with a lofty tower, and contains sittings for nearly 800 persons. The cost was about £7,000, to which sum the late Mr. Innes was a liberal contributor. There are two United Presbytorian churches in the village, one of which, a handsome building, was erected in 1871, on the same site of a former one built in 1778. A justice of the peace court is held here monthly, and a sheriff's court for the recovery of small debts is held four times a year. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,089; of the village, 862.

BURNMOUTH is a small fishing village, having a harbour situated at the foot of an almost perpendicular ledge of rock; the cottages standing near to high water mark give it a very romantic appearance. The heights in the vicinity afford very beautiful and varied scenery, extending to the Eildons on the south, Lammermoor on the west, and Bamborough on the east—the north being the ocean. It is about 2½ miles from Ayton and 6 from Berwick. It is a coast-guard station, and there is a railway station close to the entrance to the village, on the North British line. There is a spacious Board school in the village, but there is no place of worship. Eighteen boats are employed and stationed here for herring fishing, and ten of a larger class for white fishing in the winter season.

FOULDEN AND MORDINGTON.

FOULDEN is a parish and village, the latter one of the prettiest little places in the county, and was formerly a burgh of barony; 52 miles E. by S. of Edinburgh, 10 E. of Duns, and 5 N.E. of Berwick, pleasantly situated on the north side of the Whitadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. Within the last 25 years the dwellings have been nearly all rebuilt in a neat and picturesque style. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district, is two and a half miles in length by two in breadth, bounded by Ayton on the north and Hutton on the south, and contains about 3,278 acres. Foulden church is celebrated as having been the meeting place of the commissioners sent by Queen Elizabeth to vindicate her execution of Mary Queen of Scots. In 1881 the parish had a population of 393.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south-eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the mansion house of Mordington that Cromwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV. in Lamberton church (now in ruins) in this parish. At the boundary of the parish, with the liberties of Berwick, is the hamlet of LAMBERTON, and at this place (within the Scottish border) marriages were solemnised in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principles, as they were at better known Gretna. The remains of a Danish camp, Edrington Castle, situate at top of a steep rock, and the "Witches' Know," 649 feet high, where, last century several unfortunate women were burned for witchcraft, are objects not unworthy the notice of the traveller journeying through this part of the county. Ironstone some years ago was discovered within the parish, and subsequently coal has been got on the estate of Major Charles Frederick Campbell Renton, of Mordington House. The parish contains about 2,939 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 367.

GREENLAW, GORDON AND HUME.

GREENLAW is a burgh of barony, and considered (although Duns is considerably larger) the county town of Berwickshire; it is 37 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 20 W. from Berwick, 12 E. from Lauder, 7½ S.W. from Duns, and 10 N.W. from Coldstream. It is situated in a valley, on the north bank of the Blackadder, which stream is crossed by two bridges, and consists of one long street, with a large square or green, where the fairs were held, in the centre of which are the county buildings. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred first to Old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain), and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I., when the sittings were held at Duns. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1596, and by Act of Parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county. A sheriff court and one for the recovery of small debts are held monthly; the justices' court sits at Duns. The old gaol and courthouse, which stood in the churchyard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831, at the sole expense of, and presented to the shire by, the late Sir W. H. Campbell. The parish of Greenlaw lies in the centre of the Merse, extending seven or eight miles in length, from north to south, and on an average about two miles in breadth, containing about 12,149 acres. The surface of the land is for the most part level, rising occasionally into slight detached eminences. Sheep walks, moor, and soil adapted to turnips are the main characteristics of the land. Besides the Established church, there are places of worship for Free Church and United Presbyterian congregations. A cattle fair used to be held on the 22nd of May, and on the last Thursday in October, but these are now discontinued. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,245, and the village 747.

GORDON village is 5 miles S.W. from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish, which extends seven miles in length, by from two to four in breadth, and contains 9,713 acres. At Gordon resided, as it is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon, and Huntly and Huntlywood, the names of two farms in the parish, each claim the honour of giving the title of Marquis of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknowe Tower, a venerable structure (now the property of the representatives of the late James Dalrymple, Esq.), was frequently had recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised by incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms. An Established church and a Free church are the places of worship. There is also a small library containing about 300 volumes, supported by subscription. The parish of Gordon had in 1881 a population of 832, the village having 320 of this number.

HUME is a small village, situate 3 miles S. from Greenlaw; it is a joint ecclesiastical parish with STICHEL (Roxburghshire). The remains of Hume Castle, noted during the contentions on the borders, stand on a bold eminence which commands extensive and picturesque views over the greater portion of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The soil is very rich and fertile and in a high state of cultivation. A Board school and a burial ground are in the village, but there is no place of worship. The joint parish contains an area of 6,898 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 749.

HUTTON AND PAXTON

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton and district of Merse, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whitadder. Hutton is situate about seven miles from Berwick, its post town, in the northern part of the parish, and Paxton, five miles distant from Berwick, its post town, is in the eastern quarter. The parish contains 5,516 acres. The Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union bridge, from a point near Paxton, to a place a little below HORNCLIFFE, a village in the county of Northumberland. It forms the only connection of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure. It admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. The parish church is situated at Hutton. The Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Bœthius, and author of the "Border History," was at one time minister of this parish. Paxton House, the residence of Colonel David Milne Home, is noted for its picture gallery. A new school and school house were erected at Paxton in 1873, by Jean Milne Home and David Milne Home, mother and father of Colonel David Milne Home, of Paxton House, and is an ornament to the village. There is also a reading room and library, of about 900 volumes, in the village of Paxton, supported by the generosity of Colonel D. M. Home, and by members' subscriptions. The parish of Hutton in 1881 contained a population of 962, the village of Paxton at the same period having 240.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BLAINSLIE, CHANNELKIRK, OXTON, AND THIRLSTANE.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, and the capital of its parish, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 35 W. of Berwick, 21 N. of Jedburgh, 22 S.W. of Coldstream, 20 S.W. of Duns, 17 S.W. of Kelso, 12 W. of Greenlaw, 7 N. of Earlston, and about 6 miles from the Stow station on the North British railway. It is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, at the west end of which is the town house. The buildings are plain and of irregular construction, and the town was destitute of any edifice that could lay claim to particular notice until of late years. Now there are good school premises, neat and substantial houses, an excellent inn (the Black Bull) in the centre of the town, where every accommodation will be found; two banks, and a few tasteful villas in the neighbourhood. The trade is chiefly of a local and domestic nature, and manufactures have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district. The banks and the inns, and some well stored shops represent the main business of the place. A Freemason's Lodge is held in the Town Hall. The charter constituting Lauder a royal burgh was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two bailies and seven councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. A justice of peace court is held on the fourth Wednesday in January, March, May, July, September and November, and sheriff small debt courts on the last Wednesday of February, first Wednesday of July, and first Monday of October. By the Reform Act, Lauder was joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to Parliament, but, under the provisions of the Redistribution of Seats Act, is now included in the county.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, and Free and United Presbyterian churches. The first-named church, which stands to the south of the town house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice, though cruciform, is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirlstane Castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine woods, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale. The castle stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, and is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II., and decorated with massive balustrades and cornices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. The fairs formerly held here have been discontinued. The parish of Lauder contains about 34,898 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,940, the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 964.

BLAINSLIE is a small rural village in the parish of Melrose (Roxburghshire), situated at the extreme end of the parish, and about seven miles from the town of Melrose. It lies on the old road from Earlston to Lauder, four miles distant from the former place, and two and a half from the latter, from whence its letters are delivered.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK, containing about 14,191 acres, is situated among the Lammermoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwick. On the banks of the rivulets which, united, form the river Leader, or Lauder, are about 3,000 acres in tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath, and are very bleak and unproductive. Population in 1881, 607.

The village of UGSTON, now called OXTON, is about four miles from Lauder, on the south of the Edinburgh road, in the upper part of the vale of the Leader. Oxton is now the only village in the parish of Channelkirk, and in it the little business or trade that has existence throughout its entire extent is almost exclusively centred. About a mile to the west of Oxton are the remains of the village of Channelkirk, from which the parish takes its name, the minister's manse and church being all that remain of the village, which at one time was a resting-place for travellers by the old Edinburgh road, through the Lammermoors, to Lauderdale.

POLWARTH AND FOGO.

POLWARTH is a parish of about 3,000 acres, in the district of Merse. The village, now almost decayed, is 40 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 4 S.W. from Duns, and about 3½ N.E. from Greenlaw, situated on the road between the two last-named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connection with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was an ancient custom for every new married pair, with their company, to dance round an old thorn, the legend connected with which, according to Chambers, might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair of Hermandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in co-heiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors—and they had many—preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home, of Wedderburn, and it so happened that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), whilst the eldest placed her affections on the youngest, whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies they fell into the hands of an uncle, who, anxious to prevent their marriages, that he himself might become their heir, immured them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemna the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers by means of an old female beggar, and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths accompanied by a determined band of Merse men before the gate of their prison. The uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain; his nieces were forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicing—for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued—consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which, even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes, and while George carried on the line in the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair, for many years all future marriage parties danced round the thorn, and a tune seems to have been composed of the name "Polwarth on the Green," to which songs have been successfully adapted. On the front of the parish church, an ancient building, which stands about a mile south-east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church Sir Patrick Home, of Polworth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont, and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which was happily effected. The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. H. Campbell, Bart. The late Lady Campbell established the school for infants, which bears her name. The parish of Polwarth in 1881 had a population of 227.

The parish of FOGO, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream, said to be so fatal to the salmon species, stands the little village of Fogo; and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of CHESTERS, occupying the site of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length, by between three and four in breadth, and contains about 4,652 acres; the land is chiefly arable and fertile. A neat church and Board school are in the village. Population in 1881, 468.

RESTON,

AUCHENCROW, GRANT'S HOUSE, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RESTON is a village pleasantly situated on the banks of the Eye, in the parish of Coldingham, being three miles therefrom, the same distance from Ayton, and about nine from Duns. A station on the North British Railway is in the village. The places of worship are a Free church and an Established church, and there is a good Board school. Live stock sales are held every alternate Monday. The population of Reston in 1881 was 321.

AUCHENCROW is a village in the parish of Coldingham, lying between Reston and Chirnside, about two and a half miles from each place. Here is a Board school.

GRANT'S HOUSE is a village or hamlet in the same parish as the above, situated on the road to Edinburgh, seven miles from Coldingham, eight from Ayton, and five from Cockburnspath. The place derives its name from a person named Grant, the contractor for making the high road to Edinburgh, who erected a cottage for himself, now called Grant's House Inn. From the circumstance of the North British Railway passing the village, it bids fair to become a compact little place. There is a Free church here, opened in March, 1888. RENTON is a small hamlet, a mile distant.

SWINTON, WITH SIMPRIM,

WHITSOME, LADYKIRK AND HORNDALE.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIM was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse, and contains 5,561 acres. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the neat village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles S E. of Edinburgh, 12 S.W. of Berwick, and 6 N. of Coldstream. The small village of Simprim is situated at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars, or swine, whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants. The grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordinance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State," was for some time minister of Simprim. A handsome school was erected in 1877, at a cost of £2,000. In 1881 the united parishes had a population of 964, the village of Swinton possessing 440 of this number WHITSOME, including the abrogated parish of Hilton, is about four miles and a half long and two and a half broad, and contains 4,896 acres. The land is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or oozy ground. The small village of Whitsome is nearly situated in the centre of the parish, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton. Population in 1881 569.

The parish of LADYKIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two miles, and containing 3,380 acres. The old bridge which spanned the Tweed here has been superseded by a new and handsome one of stone, constructed at the expense of the Tweed Bridges Trust. The church of Ladykirk, a venerable building, stands near the Tweed, about four miles from Swinton, and nine from Berwick. Tradition ascribes its erection to the fourth James, in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood when fording the river here at the head of his army. He dedicated the edifice to "Our Lady," hence denominated Ladykirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsettlington. An elegant but substantial fountain has recently been given by Lady Marjoribanks, of Ladykirk, in commemoration of the fiftieth year of her Majesty's reign. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation; cultivation has made it rich and beautiful; and the parish is celebrated for its breed of cattle and sheep. The small village of HORNDEAN belongs to this parish An annual fair is held in Ladykirk on the 5th of April. Population of the parish in 1881, 438.

WESTRUTHER, HOUNDSLOW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WESTRUTHER is a parish, chiefly in the Lammermoor district. The village, a small one, is 32 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 8 N.E. from Lauder, 6 W. by N. from Greenlaw, and 5 N. from Gordon, situated on the road between Lauder and Duns. The parish, which is six miles in length by four in breadth, and contains 14,630 acres, is under the best process of husbandry. Spottiswoode, the fine residence of Lady Scott, is in this parish; Wedderlie, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is in the neighbourhood, and the ruins of Ively Castle, the walls of which are pretty entire, stand in the north-eastern corner of the parish. It was one of those castellated mansions of residence and defence that were common on the borders before the union of the two crowns in the reign of James VI. There are two places of worship, one under the Establishment, the other a Free church. There is also a Board school. In this parish is the village of HOUNDSLOW, a straggling assemblage of dwellings. The land in the vicinity is of a barren nature, but great improvements have been made, and every year shows an increased extent under culture. In 1881 the parish had a population of 671.

BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of BUTE, ARRAN, GREAT and LITTLE CUMBRAY (or Cumbrae), HOLY ISLE, PLADDA, and INCH-MARNOCH, compose this shire, which comprises 225 square miles of land, or 143,997 acres. In point of size it ranks as the twenty-eighth, and in population as the twenty-ninth of Scotch counties. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyllshire; and the water division between the island and the latter is often so slender that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of the "Kyles of Bute." The southern part forms the western shores of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indention of bays on either side. The length of the island is about eighteen and its breadth averages five miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous, but in the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable of being cultivated so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty, and both the botanist and the geologist will find it a rich field for their respective researches. The antiquary, also, will discover many relics of bygone days existing in the island among others, the interesting ruins of Rothesay, East and West Kames and Kilmory Castles. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is little or no extent of sea beach, in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the late Marquis of Bute, and the family seat, Mount Stewart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde.

The CLIMATE of Buteshire is eminently salubrious; neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on the hills, and the only qualification to its general genial character is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Edmund Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large island of ARRAN lies five miles south-west of Bute, and between the peninsulas of Cantyre and Ayrshire; in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south twenty miles, and in breadth twelve. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude. A small portion of the lower grounds are cultivated, but the whole is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called "the King's Cave," from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Baliol, and ascended the throne of Scotland; it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernised seat, called Brodick Castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. It was formerly famous for the excellence of its whisky; and coal, freestone, and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to Saint Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the Isle of Bute and Ayrshire; the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length, by a breadth of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital, and only town on the island, is Millport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached; this latter island is about a mile in length by half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the objects of contest with the Scots. The whole of the larger Cumbray is now the property of the Marquis of Bute. The Earl of Eglintoun is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one time contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but three parishes, and the shire altogether only seven. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in Parliament by one member, the present representative being James P. B. Robertson, Esq., Q.C. Bute gives the title of Marquis to the family of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquis of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II., who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in 1703. The lord lieutenant of the county is Lieut.-Colonel J. F. D. Crichton-Stuart. The parliamentary constituency for 1887-88 was 2,967. According to the returns presented to Government in 1871, the population of the shire was 16,997, and by those for 1881, 17,657. The valuation of the county for 1887-88, exclusive of the burgh of Rothesay, was £63,864.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BRODICK AND LAMLASH, WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN has been partially described under the the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes, KILBRIDE and KILMORY. Kilbride parish occupies about one half of the island, on the east side, extending 25 miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from Saint Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have been extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. The present edifice, which is situated in LAMLASH, was erected in 1774; a new one was in 1885 built at the cost of the Duke of Hamilton. The anchorage in Lamlash Bay is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland, affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish Channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high protecting rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay, is the village, where there is a good inn, called the Lamlash Hotel. In this parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles, or places of worship. Brodick Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the Bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfell mountain, which eminence rises nearly 3,000 feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a very handsome and commodious family hotel, erected by the Duke of Hamilton, facing the new pier, enclosed in spacious grounds, and a splendid view may be obtained from the various apartments of this hotel, including Brodick Bay, Goatfell mountain, and Glenrosa, together with the coast of Ayrshire and Argyleshire. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island. The Isle of Arran, which embraces an area of 105,436 statute acres, contained in 1871 a population of 5,234, and in 1881, 4,762.

The parish of KILMORY (Kil-a-Mhoire, or St. Mary's burying place) occupies fully more than half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory, which a few years ago was stripped and rebuilt by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, at a cost of £1,300, is situate on the southern extremity. "For fertility of soil," as a recent writer remarks, "Kilmory is truly like the Garden of Eden. In the neighbourhood of Lagg Hotel or of the parish church, the district is one of the finest and richest a gracious Providence hath bestowed on man. Dairy produce is abundant, and fair crops are obtained from large fields well laid out with good fences. The hills are of moderate height, and so accessible to culture that every spot is convertible to use." The island is noted for its situation as a herring fishery, but this is pursued by only a comparatively small portion of the inhabitants, chiefly at the north end. The staple industry of the island is agriculture, which, under the fostering care of the Arran Farmers' Society, who hold annual ploughing matches cattle shows, &c., is attaining to a degree of excellance which will compare favourably with some of the best cultivated districts on the mainland. The majority of the inhabitants are occupiers of small plots of land, but a considerable moiety occupy holdings rented at from about £400 £800. The smaller tenants taking advantage of the influx of summer visitors find house letting a ready source of providing additional winter comforts, and even those who by industry and thrift have managed to lay up a decent competence, do not hesitate to extemporise for dwellings every available outhouse, in order to place the ordinary house accommodation at the disposal of the incomers. As a summer resort the island is held in high reputation, as, besides possessing a climate highly salubrious— the longevity of the people being remarkable—it presents ample opportunities for boating, sea and trout fishing, botanical and geological researches, and kindred outdoo pursuits. All the streams, many of which afford tolerably good sport to the careful angler, are free to all comers, except two in the neighbourhood of Dugarie Shooting Lodge. Game is abundant, as it is also scrupulously preserved by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, who, however, places no restriction on the peregrinations of excursionists, prosecution for trespass being unknown on the island. A good road runs along the shore for the whole circuit of the island, a distance of 60 miles, while two roads cut across from shore to shore—one from Lagg to Lamlash, and the other from Shiskine to Brodick. Following the road along the shore, 25 miles of the distance traversed are within the limits of Kilbride parish, and the remaining 35 miles within Kilmory parish. Till the last twenty or thirty years scarcely any part of Arran, beyond the Brodick district—always rich in woodland—could boast of trees; now, however, by the exertions of the Duke of Hamilton's foresters, plantations of considerable extent and growth form a special feature of attraction in various localities, the beautiful and wooded glen of Lagg, in Kilmory parish, and other sequestered spots, presenting a combination of scenery which never fails to "satisfy the eye and make the mind glad." The island is copiously watered by the numerous streams issuing on either side from the "great backbone of mountain rock," extending from north to south. Its natural beauties have again and again formed the subject for the artists' pencil and the poets' theme. Mountain, rock, and glen, and deep ravine, and gushing stream, appearing in panoramic succession, form a pleasing background to the belt of green pasture slopes and cultivated land, which, for the most part, fringe the seaboard of the island. Fairs are held at Brodick on the first Tuesday after the 20th of June, and at Lamlash in the months of April and October. Population of the parish of Kilmory in 1871, 2,879; and of the parish of Kilbride, 2,380; in 1881 Kilmory had a population of 2,742, and Kilbride, 2,020.

MILLPORT (ISLE OF CUMBRAY.)

THE ISLES OF CUMBRAY (or Cumbrae), have been already noticed on a preceding page, in the description of Buteshire. Millport is a burgh, constituted 1864, under the Act 23 and 24 Vic., CAP. 96, and is governed by commissioners and a senior and two junior magistrates. It is chiefly resorted to for sea bathing, being charmingly situated on the south side of the greater Cumbray, about four miles from Largs, in Ayrshire, between which town, as well as Greenock and Glasgow, communication is maintained by means of a regular service of steamers. The excellent harbour and pier here present perfect convenience for the landing or embarkation of passengers. Ninety years ago this place possessed only one dwelling, the hut of a fisherman. The number of inhabitants in the two Cumbrays amounts at the present time to about eighteen hundred and seventy, of whom a considerable proportion are resident in Millport; and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the Isles. The village is gas-lighted, a parochial board exists, a sheriff and small debts court is held in March and September, and a bowling green, splendid golfing links, and choral society are established. Pleasantly situated on the shore is a beautiful marine pavilion, in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the Marquis of Bute, who is now owner of the whole of the larger Cumbray. The principal object of attraction is the Episcopal College and Church, a beautiful Gothic erection, situated on an eminence overlooking the town and bay, founded and endowed by the Hon. George F. Boyle, and opened in 1850-51. Both are now, however, closed. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a plain edifice, with a handsome quadrangular tower; an Episcopal church, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. The schools, two in number, are well attended. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—chiefly fishermen and owners of their own boats. Some parts of the greater Cumbray are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbray is a lighthouse. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglinton.

CONVEYANCE BY WATER.

To LARGS, WEMYSS BAY, GLASGOW and GREENOCK, Steam Vessels daily, and to FAIRLIE during the summer months.

ROTHESAY,

KAMESBURGH (OR PORT BANNATYNE), ASCOG, KILCHATTAN, KINGARTH, KERRYCROY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESAY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of its parish, 96 miles W. from Edinburgh (by Mid-Calder), 40 S.W. from Glasgow, 18 S.W. from Greenock, 22 N. from Lamlash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 N.W. from Cumbray, and 9 N.W. from Largs; finely situated at the head of a bay, called Rothesay, on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Rothesay was its castle, whose ruins yet exist, and the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it. The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when it was besieged by Hushac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance. Having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1253, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Baliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce. In 1334, Edward Baliol retook the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited this castle in 1376, in 1381, and in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, Duke of Rothesay, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent. Additional facts are given in Mr. W. A. Wilson's admirable "Guide to Rothesay," to which we refer our readers.

The herring fishery, which has long been active here, caused a great revival in Rothesay, and stimulated the restoration of decayed buildings, and the erection of new ones. Fish curing is still carried on, but not to the same extent as formerly. There is a factory where cotton spinning and the manufacture of muslin is carried on. Three branch banks and one for savings, and several comfortable hotels are in the town, the Bute Hotel, at the head of the pier, the Queen's Hotel, in Argyle street, the Royal Hotel, in Albert place, and the Victoria, in Victoria street, being the principal; they are all conducted in a manner satisfactory to their numerous visitants. The lodging houses are very numerous, and upon every scale. Five newspapers are published here—the Buteman, the Rothesay Chronicle, Rothesay Express, West Coast Journal, and the Visitors' List, the latter being issued during the season only. About a mile to the east of the town was a salutary mineral spring, now closed; near this is Glenburn House Hydropathic Establishment. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent. A pier, erected in 1882, has since been enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened, at a very considerable expense. The Norman Stewart Institute was opened on 4th July, 1885, by Provost Sharp. The Working Men's Club, Bute Women's Temperance Prayer Union, Rothesay Young Women's Christian Association, and other similar organisations have the most sumptuous accommodation provided for them in this noble institute, which has been erected in Montague street, at a cost of £10,000, partly by funds bequeathed by the late Mr. Norman Stewart of Richmond, Virginia, but mainly by his nephews, Messrs. John, Daniel, and Bryce Stewart of America, natives of Rothesay. There is a large and handsome refreshment room on the ground floor, and on the other floors there are amply supplied reading and waiting rooms, billiard room, and recreation and smoking rooms.

The site of a battery which was erected early in the present century, when Napoleon threatened to invade Britain, on a point adjoining Mount Stuart road, on the shore of the east bay, is now occupied by the Rothesay Royal Aquarium. In front of the east pier, an elegant fountain has been erected, as a memorial of the late Prince Consort, and another neat fountain is erected in Guildford square. The Town Hall and County Buildings were rebuilt at an expense of upwards of £9,000, raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions. They form a handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant castellated tower, containing a bell and beautiful clock, having four transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the late Marquis of Bute. The edifice comprises a spacious court room, in which the sheriff, burgh, and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerks' and procurator fiscal's offices, with other requisite apartments. At the east end of the court house is a painting of the late Lord Bute, by Mr. Graham Gilbert. Beneath the court room is the prison, which was enlarged in 1870, but is now closed. The new public halls are a pile of buildings facing Prince's pier, and are used for concerts, lectures, public meetings, &c. seating upwards of 1,350 persons. There are several good schools and academies in the town; amongst the latter is the Rothesay Academy and the Thomson Institute, which was erected and partially endowed by the trustees of the late Duncan Thomson, Esq. Ardbeg, Bute. It provides a course of classical and general education, suited to the demand of the present time. The building is a noble pile in the Gothic style of architecture, and occupies a commanding site on the rising ground of the west bay in the middle of a park kindly presented by the present Marquis of Bute. The Academy has been transferred to the School Board of the burgh.

Rothesay was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III., under charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI. in 1584. The government of the town is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, the town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff and commissary courts are held every Tuesday and Thursday; a justice of peace court for the recovery of small debts sits on the first Monday in every month. The quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October, and all criminal cases for the circuit court justiciary are tried at Inverary. The list of places of worship will be found at the end of the Directory of the town. In the neighbourhood of this respectable town are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About 5 miles S.E. is Mount Stuart, the beautiful and romantic seat of the Marquis of Bute. About 2 miles S.W., and at the end of the Chapelton road, is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) "Kean's Cottage," from having been built by that eminent tragedian; the house stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of Loch Fad, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of various hemills. The climate of Bute being very salutary, from its mildness, to those afflicted with pulmonary complaints, the faculty recommend numerous patients to the balmy influence of Rothesay. The parish of Rothesay extends over an area of 6,083 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 8,538, of which 8,291 belonged to the burgh.

KAMESBURGH or Port Bannatyne (the latter being better known), is situated 2¼ miles N. from Rothesay, and is a fish-curing station. This branch of industry is, however, not prosecuted extensively at the present time. The port possesses a small quay and a substantial pier, and there are several well-furnished houses, the latter occupied principally by the families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat. Half a mile distant is the ancient Castle of Kames, the property of the Marquis of Bute. Nearly a mile to the west is the church of North Bute, erected in 1836 at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the late Marquis of Bute; and in the village is the Free church, erected in 1843. St. Ninian's Chapel of Ease, in connection with the Established Church, was opened in July, 1886, the cost of erection being about £5,000. Population of North Bute parish in 1881, 1,218.

ASCOG, about 3 miles S.E. from Rothesay, is situated on a lovely bay. There are many elegant mansions and villas here, and on a point of rock jutting out into the water is a neat Free church, in the grounds of which, to the east, rest the remains of the famous painter, Montague Stanley. At the extreme south end of the island, above Dunnagoil Bay, there stands an extensive vitrified fort, and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called Chapel hill, rising above Argyle street, were the remains of the ancient chapel of St. Bride, removed when improving the hill. The Bute Farmers' Society has done much for the agriculture and farm stock of the island, premiums and prizes for which are awarded at the annual show, which is held in Rothesay, in May. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, the last Wednesday in October, and Tuesday before Kilbarchan December fair — all chiefly for cattle.

Four miles S.E. from Rothesay is KERRYCROY hamlet, pleasantly situated on Scoulag Bay, the village forming a crescent round the strand. The entrance to Mount Stuart policies commences here, and between the village and Ascog is a Board school.

KILCHATTAN village, about 8 miles S. of Rothesay, is beautifully situated on a bay of the same name. Within a short distance is the parish church of KINGARTH, an elegant modern edifice, and in the village are a Free church and school. Half a mile from the east shore are the remains of a Druidical circle, and towards the west shore, and also near the north-east shore of the bay, are several other interesting Druidical remains. In the neighbourhood of Kilchattan is the curious promontory of Garrochhead; about a mile to the south of this, in a quiet romantic dell, stand the remains of the church or chapel of St. Blane, and about a mile south-west from St. Blane's chapel is the vitrified fort of Dunnagoil. The area of the parish of Kingarth is 8,995 statute acres, and in 1881 its population numbered 1,260.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Frith on the north separates the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about thirty in breadth at the middle; altogether it comprehends an area of 712 square miles, or 448,068 acres. This county in point of size ranks as the thirteenth, and in population as the twenty-first.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catinii, from whom the present apellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and the monumental remains indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Girnigo, the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity; before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction. At length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson, by the female line of Robert II.; he was made Chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II., and received a grant of the earldom of Caithness. The earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the crown in the reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is chiefly devoted to tillage, and in the centre and along the sea border is moderately fertile. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few enclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county above the level of the sea are, Maiden's Paps, 2,000 ft.; Scarry Hills, 1,876 ft; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 ft. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809 a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads throughout the country has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county; clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated, and the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and beans, both of good quality. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation; the imports being foreign timber, coal, salt, flour and general merchandize. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game, and the district throughout with hares, rabbits, grouse, plovers, &c. In the caverns along the coast seals form their harbours the hunters enter in small boats, with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, which they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. This county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat. The chief mineral production is flagstones, used for flooring, pavement, &c., these stones being well known for their durability; and in the quarrying and dressing of which many men are employed. Ironstone and freestone of excellent quality are also found. The white and herring fishery is prosecuted with success, and the curing of fish is another branch of trade in which many persons are engaged. The CLIMATE, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude (fifty-ninth degree), where the duration of the night at one period of the year is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets and some waters of greater magnitude; the principal among the latter are Forss and Thurso rivers on the north-west, and Wick and Berrydale on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Watten, a fine sheet of water, about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of note are Sinclair Bay, on the north-east, and Cannes Bay on the north. The county is greatly benefited by means of the Highland Railway, the towns of Wick, Thurso, &c., now being placed in direct communication with all parts of the country.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso. The county sends one member to Parliament, and Wick joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, elects another representative. The present member for the county is Gavin Brown Clark, Esq., M.D. The parliamentary constituency for 1887-88 was 3,878. The Earl of Caithness is lord lieutenant of the county. By the census returns for 1871, the entire county contained a population of 39,992, and by those for 1881, 38,865. The valuation of the county for 1887-88, inclusive of railways, was £138,045.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON,

DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, TORBEG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of LATHERON, 13 miles S. from Wick, and 25 N. from Helmsdale, situated on the south-east side of the county. The parish extends from the Ord of Caithness 27 miles along the coast, by a breadth of from 13 to 15 miles. The houses are substantially built and regularly laid out, and in the suburbs are some which are entitled to come under the description of neat and handsome residences. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully or beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour. The "Brothers Port," the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these "sea-kings," or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flowed into it with trees, earth, moss and stone; and thus converted into a solid beach and corn-field what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day. However, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation. A proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since, mooring ringbolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high water mark. Upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman Catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty cottages. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship, and with these are connected schools. Latheron kirk stands half way on the coast near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso. DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, and TORBEG are also villages in Latheron parish. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the second Tuesday in November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th July. The parish of Latheron embraces 119,589 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 6,670; of this number 831 were returned for the village of Lybster.

THURSO,

CASTLETOWN IN OLRIG, REAY, HALKIRK AND DUNNET.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20¼ N.W. from Wick, the same distance W. from John o'Groats, 46 E. from Tongue, and 96 from Bonar Bridge, by the way of Tongue, and the western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, at the head of a spacious bay, surrounded by a rocky coast; and its headlands forming a bow, render it one of the finest bays in the kingdom. Here the turbulent waves of the Pentland Firth and the powerful currents find resistance in the east by Dunnet Head, which stretches out its rocky promontory with a precipitous front, whilst the furious winds from the west are checked in their wild career by the Holburn Head. The original name of Thurso, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is "Inverhorsa;" inver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfœus, the Danish historian, mentions that in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms "The Town of Caithness," and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. He adds that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II., King of Scotland, about the year 1005 resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes in Moray, which in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. We find, by one of the statutes of King David of Scotland, that the weights and measures of Caithness, or Thurso, were the standard for Scotland. Vessels of any burthen may find shelter in the bay in any weather, and few places possess superior advantages for refuge to the mariner than Scrabster Roads, as it is called. A promenade has been constructed facing the sea, at the expense of the inhabitants of the town; it is upwards of 300 yards in length. The town, which is situated on the left bank of the river, is neat, clean, and rapidly increasing in size. There is a line of railway in connection with the Sutherland and Highland Railway, which affords direct communication between Wick, Thurso and the South. The walks in the neighbourhood of the town are romantic, and some approach close to the edge of the precipitous cliffs overhanging the sea. The river, too, is beautiful, and famed for the almost miraculous draughts of salmon occasionally taken. Either bank is connected by an elegant stone bridge, but the want of a better pier is much felt, as vessels intending to enter must wait the tide before they can cross the bar. This is a great inconvenience to the main export of the place, which consists of "Caithness pavement," an article in great demand, the manufacture of which is carried on to a prodigious extent, and involves the prosperity of the place. The peculiar excellence belonging to this staple is its durability, its resistance to moisture, and its retention of an unbroken surface. Specimens may be seen in the houses of Parliament, London, and many public buildings throughout the United Kingdom. Nowhere in Scotland has agricultural progress been so rapid as in Caithness. The industry and energy of the farmer generally rise in proportion to the obstacles which nature presents. Immense tracts of heath land, which would have been left uncultivated in the fertile Lowlands, have been subjected to the plough, whilst many thousands of acres of bog and swamp have been drained. The monetary establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the British Linen Co. Bank, and a Savings Bank. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., as superior.

The places of worship are the parish church, two Free churches, and chapels for the Original Seceders and Independents, and an Episcopal church. The church of the Establishment is a neat Gothic structure, with a tower and clock—the latter presented by the late Henry Miller, Esq., of London, but a native of Thurso. The first Free church is conspicuous for its elegance of architecture. There are public and Free Church schools, well conducted and attended. At the top of Sinclair street is an institution endowed by Alexander Miller, Esq., and erected for the purpose of affording education to boys. A hospital has been erected at a cost of about £6,000, the money for which was left by the late Mr. Dunbar, of Scrabster, and was opened for admission of patients in May, 1885. The building is a very handsome one; the foundation stone was laid by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, in 1831. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., which within the last few years has been greatly enlarged and modernised. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq., one of the plenipotentiaries from the court of St. James for settling the peace of 1783. It is also the birthplace of the late Sir John Sinclair, Bart., of Ulbster, whose name is associated with the Statistical Account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions, and to whose memory a very elegant monument of freestone has been erected on a square piece of ground fronting the Established church; it was presented to the town by Alexander Miller, Esq. The late Robert Dick, an eminent botanist and geologist, was a resident of this town, and his collection of specimens now forms an important part of the Thurso Museum. The weekly market is held on Friday, and the annual fairs on the second Tuesday in July and first Friday in September. By the returns made to Government in 1871, the parish of Thurso, the area of which is 28,049 acres, had a population of 5,754, the town containing 3,622; in 1881 the numbers returned were: for the parish, 6,217; for the town, 4,055.

REAY is a parish about 10 miles W. of Thurso. The Sutherland section of Reay is somewhat wild and hilly, the highest mountains being Ben Readh and Ben Dorrery. The parish is about 20 miles long, with a breadth of 12 miles, and comprehends an area of 115,301 acres. There is lime, granite, millstone, with traces of lead and iron, mineral springs, &c. There are Established and Free churches and schools in the parish. Fairs are held on the Monday before and Tuesday after August 15th. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,191.

CASTLETOWN is a small neat village, in the parish of Olrig, situated rather more than 15 miles N.W. of Wick, and nearly six E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the estate of Castlehill, from which is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring and flagging footways, &c. It lies in beds of from three-quarters of an inch to six inches in thickness. Blocks have often been raised measuring 100 superficial feet; hence they are carried to the shore, where they are prepared and dressed, previous to shipping, to facilitate which a small and convenient harbour has been formed. In 1881 the parish of Olrig had a population of 2,002, Castletown having 932 of that number.

DUNNET, a parish of 16,844 acres, 3 miles N.E. from Castletown, and about 10 miles long by 4 wide, is the most northern part of Scotland. Dunnet Head is a rock from 100 to 400 feet high, upon which is a light at an altitude of 346 feet, first lighted in 1831, and which is seen by the mariner for 23 miles. There are Established and Free churches, together with schools. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April and last Tuesday in August for cattle, horses, and pigs. Population in 1881, 1,607.

HALKIRK is a parish 7 miles S. of Thurso, about 24 miles in length, by a breadth of about 8, and comprises 95,763 acres. It contains about 24 small lakes, abounding with trout, &c. There are Established and Free churches, and public schools. Many ruins may be seen in this parish. The main line of the Sutherland and Caithness Railway passes through, and has a station here. Population in 1881, 2,705.

WICK,

LOUISBURGH, PULTENEYTOWN, WATTEN, BOWER, CANISBAY AND KEISS.

WICK is a parish and royal burgh; the town, a considerable one, improving and flourishing, is 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 61 N. by E. from Dornoch, and 20 S.W. from Thurso; situated on the north-east coast of Caithness, forming the segment of a circle around the bay of Wick, and along the banks of the river Wick, where it enters the German Ocean. The town is divided into three parts, viz., PULTENEYTOWN, LOUISBURGH and WICK. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes. Bridge street, more regular in its construction, is ornamented by several elegant erections, among which the town and county buildings form a neat and handsome pile, faced with freestone, and surmounted by a cupola with a public clock. The Town Hall has a spacious apartment, containing portraits of the late eminent Sir John Sinclair, and other local celebrities, and which is used as a council room, and for the meetings of the Commissioners of Supply for the county; also the town clerk's and other offices. Within the last few years the aspect of Bridge street has entirely changed, many new buildings, all having architectural features, more or less pretentious, having taken the place of the old houses. The Town and County Bank, Limited, the County Court House, the Station Hotel, Wick Free church, and Brim's and Gunn's buildings make up a total which would not be discreditable to a much larger town. Elegant premises have also recently been erected in High street for the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. The Temperance Hall, seated for 1,200 people, is the chief place in which public meetings and entertainments are held. STAXIGOE, BROADHAVEN, KEISS and SARCLET are suburban villages, populated principally by fishermen, having each a separate harbour. The harbour of Sarclet is now a total wreck, with little prospect of being rebuilt.

PULTENEYTOWN, which may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce and fisheries of Wick, was purchased when a mere waste by the society in London formed for extending British fisheries, and various means have been adopted to carry out the great and beneficial objects of the society. The local business of the society is managed by an agent, whose residence overlooks the harbours, and who is ex-officio chairman of the Pulteneytown Improvement Commissioners, who, under a special Act of Parliament, have the oversight of lighting and cleansing the town, for which an assessment is imposed. The feus and rental of Pulteneytown go into the revenue of the British Fisheries Society. The port of Wick consists of two harbours of fair dimensions, which are now being greatly improved by deepening, so that the fishing fleet can enter at all states of the tide. A new breakwater was constructed at a cost of about £120,000, but this magnificent erection is now no longer to be seen, having been demolished by the fearful storms which sweep across the North Sea from the north-east, and spend their force upon the Caithness coast. Owing to the excessively perilous nature of the east coast fishing ground, a deep sea harbour is imperatively needed here to prevent the frequently recurring disasters which take place along the coast. The harbours, which were formerly under the care of the British Fisheries Society, were about eight years ago handed over to the Pulteneytown Harbour Trust, by special Act of Parliament. While the royal burgh of Wick can trace its history back for centuries, Pulteneytown can only speak of its generations, and so much more fortunate is it in this respect, that while Wick and Louisburgh consist chiefly of closes and lanes, Pulteneytown has been from the first laid out on a settled plan. Its regular streets, squares and terraces compare favourably with that of any northern town. Here most of the work of the town is done. Its cooperages, flour mills, net, rope and woollen manufactories, saw mills and distillery, employ two-thirds of the whole population. On the Wick side of the river is Messrs. Alexander M'Ewen & Son's Caithness steam saw mills and cabinet works, and in Pulteneytown are the respective establishments of Messrs. W. & A. Geddes and Mr. David Sutherland, who are engaged in the same business. Pulteneytown is supplied with water from the loch of Hempriggs, and Wick a few years ago brought an abundant water supply from the loch of Yarrows, at a cost of £6,000. Ship building has entirely ceased since the demise of Mr. Bremner, whose engineering talents were successfully employed in floating the Great Britain steamship, which grounded on the coast of Ireland; but the business of boat building is carried on, and with the manufacture of herring barrels and nets is the principal source of employment for the non-fishing class. The herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season commencing in July and ending in September, the home fishery is prosecuted to an extent almost unparalleled elsewhere. From May to July the fishermen are busily engaged with the summer fishing at Stornoway and other places in the Western Hebrides. During the home fishing the population is increased by an influx of about five thousand Highlanders, men and women, who come as "hired hands." The scene both on water and land at this time is not to be equalled anywhere. About 600 boats manned by six men each, set sail every evening for the fishing ground, the distance to which varies from 1½ to 60 miles, and return next morning. The sight, which is unique, is witnessed by spectators who come from all parts of the country. The gutting and curing of the herrings gives labour to hundreds of men and women, and on a busy day the quay presents a scene both animated and picturesque. On all sides one hears the voice of Gaelic and broad Scotch, mingled with French, Dutch, German, and almost every other national tongue. The winter herring, cod and ling fishing is carried on extensively. It brings to the town fish buyers from all the large centres of population in England. The fish exported from Wick during a year is computed at about £300,000, the benefit from which is diffused over a wide district. The railway transports the whole winter catch to the southern markets, while the vessels belonging to the port, and a large contingent from other Scotch ports, and also foreign vessels, are busily engaged taking the summer fish to Dantzic, Hamburg, St. Petersburg, and other places on the continent, and various ports in Ireland. Six branch banks are established here, namely, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Company, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. There is also a National Security Savings Bank, which is well supported. There are two weekly newspapers, the Northern Ensign and the John o' Groat Journal.

Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1589, by the influence of George, Earl of Caithness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle Girnigo, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin. It is situated about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Adjoining the Castle of Girnigo is Sinclair Castle, of almost equal antiquity. Near by stands Ackergill Tower, the residence of G. Duff Dunbar, Esq. (of Hempriggs), who receives about one fourth of the rental of the whole parish of Wick—the valuation of the parish, including the Parliamentary burgh of Wick, being £9,858. Another interesting ruin in the vicinity is Oliphant Castle, known as the "Old Man of Wick," which along with the lighthouse on Noss head (one of the best lights around the British Isles) form excellent landmarks to seamen. There are numerous remains of Pictish dwellings in the district; five stone coffins and a number of weapons and a collection of pottery have been found in different parts of the parish. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh and the returning station at elections. It joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty in returning a member to the Imperial Parliament, its present representative being John Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The government of the town is vested in fifteen councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer; their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, and the amount of their revenue inconsiderable, being confined to the rental of market dues and some curing stations. There is a justice of the peace court and a sheriff's court, the former sitting every alternate Monday, the latter every Tuesday and Friday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where within the county. The customs collection extends from Meikle Ferry to Cape Wrath, with substations at Thurso and Little Ferry, the number of shipping registered being about 6,500 tons. Different foreign states are represented by resident vice-consuls.

There are places of worship of the Establishment and the Free Church of Scotland; the former have one in Wick and one in Pulteneytown, and the latter one in Wick and two in Pulteneytown, and there are others for congregations of United Presbyterians, Independents, Evangelical Union, Baptists, Roman Catholics, and Episcopalians. The United Presbyterians, Independents and Episcopalians have built new churches, thereby adding greatly to the architectural beauty of the town; the locality of each and their officiating ministers are given in the Directory. The Pulteneytown Academy was founded and endowed by the British Fisheries Society, but is now under the control of the burgh School Board. Since the passing of the Education Act, great improvements have been made in the schools of this district. The North and South and West Banks schools are of a chaste and imposing construction, and were erected at great cost. The Free Libraries Act was adopted in the parish of Wick in 1887, and premises for a library and reading room have been fitted up in Union street, Pulteneytown. The Chamber of Commerce is composed of the principal business men in the district, and meets on the first day of January in every year. The Agricultural Society holds an important annual cattle show at Georgemas, on the last Friday in February. A market is held every Friday, and fairs on the 24th June (if Tuesday), or Tuesday after, Tuesday after 20th July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th November (old style); but the stock of the district is generally disposed of at auction sales held at Wick and Thurso. In 1871 the parliamentary burgh of Wick contained a population of 8,131, and in 1881, 8,026.

WATTEN is a parish situated about 9 miles W.N.W. of Wick, and is bounded on the north by Bower, on the east by Wick, on the south by Latheron, and on the west by Halkirk. In the north-west part of the parish, which is of a square figure and measures from 7 to 8 miles each way, there is a fine sheet of water about 3 miles in length, called Loch Watten, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. There are places of worship in connection with the Established and Free Churches, and a Board school is in the village. The parish of Watten comprises an area of 30,579 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,406.

CANISBAY is a parish 7 miles from Keiss, situated on the Pentland Frith, and includes Duncansby Head, John o' Groat's House and Stroma Island. In size it is about 10 miles by 5. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and fishing. There are Established and Free churches and a board school in the parish. Acreage, 26,243. Population in 1881, 2,626.

BOWER is a parish 10 miles N.W. of Wick, and in size is about 11 miles by 3, rising from Heather Cowcairn, from which a fine view is obtained. Acreage, 19,677. Population in 1881, 1,608.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland, is bounded on the south and west by the Frith of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire; on the east also, it joins for a short distance the county of Fife, and a detached portion of Stirlingshire, touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed ten miles at its greatest length, nor more than eight at its extreme breadth, and it has an area of forty-six square miles, or 29,741 statute acres.

Anciently the whole of the valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil Hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers; one of them, near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another, contiguous to Tillicoultry, is supposed from its similarity of architecture to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third, or the Alloa Tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. At Dollar are the ruins of Castle Campbell, standing on a lofty eminence, which are also particularised in the description of that village. From the shores of the Forth the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil Hills, the highest of which, Benclengh, attains the height of 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts, adjacent to the Forth, are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed. Besides the Forth the county is watered by two other streams, namely, the Devon and the Black Devon, and it is connected with RAILWAYS, by means of branches of the North British and Caledonian lines, communicating with Alloa, Clackmannan, Alva, Tillicoultry, and Dollar.

MANUFACTURES, PRODUCE, &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, tartans, &c., has been for many years established in the parishes of Tillicoultry and Alva, with complete success, and the towns belonging them have become thriving places in consequence, and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. At Alloa and Clackmannan, wool spinning is carried on very extensively. Throughout the whole county coal is worked, and at various times valuable ores of silver, lead, copper, etc., have been found in the Ochils.

This shire contains four parishes and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloa, Clackmannan, Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alva; the last named is connected judicially with Stirlingshire, and politically with Clackmannanshire. The county possesses neither royal nor parliamentary burghs, but it unites with Kinross-shire in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative for the joint counties is the Right Hon. John Blair Balfour, Q.C. The parliamentary constituency in 1887-88 was 5,812. The entire county contained, by the census returns of 1871, a population of 23,747, and by those of 1881, 25,680. The valuation of the county for 1887-88 was, exclusive of railways, £121,922, and of railways, £11,154.

ALLOA,

WITH SOUTH ALLOA, TULLIBODY, SAUCHIE AND CAMBUS.

ALLOA, a town of considerable commercial importance, and the leading one of the county, is 30 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 32 S. from Perth, 7 E. from Stirling, the same distance S.W. from Dollar, 5 N.W. from Kincardine, and 3 S.S.W. from Tillicoultry. The word "Alloa" is supposed to be a corruption of the Celtic words "Aull waeg;" signifying the way to the sea, or the sea-way. It is situated on the north bank of the river Forth, at the point where the river ends and the Frith begins. At this spot, and for ten miles above it, the water is deep enough to admit vessels of 70 tons. The quay stretches along the bank, and large vessels or steamboats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, to the great convenience of passengers, and is the more worthy of appreciation as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. A dock was constructed in 1863, which is 600 feet long and 150 feet broad, with 21 feet depth of water. Till 1854, Alloa was a burgh of barony, under the management of trustees, but in February of that year, the inhabitants adopted the Burgh and Police Act, and in 1863, the Commissioners under that Act unanimously adopted the General Police (Scotland) Act of 1862, known as "Lindsay's Act." The burgh of Alloa is now governed by a board of nine commissioners, constituted agreeably to the provisions of the above Act, one of them acting as chief and two of them as junior magistrates. An ordinary meeting is held on the second Monday in each month, and statutory meetings on the second Monday of the months of January, April, July and October. The ordinary and small debt courts for the county are held weekly, a sheriff court twice a week, a justice of the peace court at stated periods, and a fiars court annually.

Of late years the town has considerably improved in appearance, many of the oldest houses having been removed to make room for others of a more modern class. Many public buildings have been added, and constructed in such a style as to enhance the appearance of the town. At the top of Mar street is situated the County Court House, erected in the Flemish style of architecture, at a cost of £8,700, and which was formally opened on the 8th of December, 1865. About the middle of High street is the Corn Exchange, which is used also as a public hall; it was built in 1862, at a cost of £1,150, and is the property of a joint-stock company. Powers having been acquired for feuing the glebe which lies to the west of the town, a new suburb has made its appearance there, the principal building being the Archæological Museum and Hall. This institution was erected in 1874, and besides furnishing the members of the Archæological Society with suitable accommodation for their specimens, library and meetings, affords advantages to the public for meetings of a smaller kind than those held in the Corn Exchange; the total cost was about £2,000. At a little distance from this hall a new burgh school has been built on the site of the old assembly rooms and parochial school; it was opened in 1876, and accommodates 500 scholars, the cost being about £5,000. In Greenside street are the Paton School and the Greenside Chapel. The former was erected in 1865, from a trust fund left by the late Alexander Paton, Esq., of Cowden Park, for educational purposes, and is suitably endowed. The front of the school faces the foot of Candle street, and, with its ornamental tower, presents a handsome appearance. The latter was built by D. Paton, Esq., and placed by him under trustees for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. In Bank street, which is a continuation of Mill street, are the Municipal buildings. The old Burgh chambers had long been felt to be unsuitable, and in 1872 the Commissioners of the town proceeded to erect the very beautiful buildings which grace the street in which they stand; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, and cost about £4,000. Adjacent to these is the new Post Office, a substantial three-storey building in the classic style of architecture, which was opened on the 13th of November, 1882. The town is extending principally to the north, at Greenfield and Claremont, and eastward along the Clackmannan road. Villas are also rising to the west in rapid succession, adding much to the beauty of the place, amongst which may be mentioned the beautiful mansion of Norwood, the residence of J. Thomson Paton, Esq. It is in the Scottish baronial style, and forms a point of attraction in the approach to Alloa from the west. Beyond it is Arnsbrae House, the residence of James Younger, Esq., a fine building in a commanding situation. In 1877 land was acquired by the Commissioners, as a feu, from the Earl of Mar and Kellie, which has been laid out as a public park. It extends over 20 acres, is triangular in shape, and generally level, with the exception of a slight elevation at the north-east corner; it was formally opened on the 1st of May, 1878. At the east end of the town a new cemetery has been laid out, which covers an area of six acres. The Public Hall and Free Library is situated in Mars hill with the main front looking down Church street, and with access to the back from Mar place. It is the gift of John Thomson Paton, Esq., of Norwood, and was designed by Mr. Waterhouse, R.A. of London, in the Gothic style, the large hall being capable of holding 1,000 people. Mr. Paton has also presented an organ to the hall at a cost of about £1,709, and has likewise given £1,000 for the founding of the library, the ratepayers having adopted the Free Libraries Act on the 22nd June, 1886.

The trade of Alloa has been gradually increasing, and it is expected that the improvements and enlargement of the dock will contribute to its further development. In 1871 a bill was obtained giving powers for the construction of new works, and under these powers the Harbour Trustees have greatly extended the dock, and have also obtained a powerful steam dredger for keeping the dock and harbour clear of mud. Beside the brewing and yarn trades, for which the town is so noted, many other articles of industry are produced. There are several foundries—iron, copper and brass—extensive bottle works, a pottery, to which has been added a department for glass engraving, machine works, cooperages, saw mills, a ship building yard, a brick and tile manufactory, and a dye-wood works. The collieries around Alloa are very numerous, and the export trade of the port depends to a large extent upon them. There are five branch banking establishments—the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland, together with a Bank for Savings. Four newspapers are published in Alloa weekly—the Advertiser, the Circular, the Journal, and the Weekly News. Immense quantities of whiskey are manufactured here, the Carsebridge Distillery, one of the largest in the kingdom, being capable of producing from 50,000 to 60,000 gallons of proof spirit weekly, and the quality and quantity of the ale exceed those of any other town in Scotland. About 100 vessels of various burthen belong to Alloa and its adjacent creeks. The exports comprise ale, whiskey, glass bottles, coal, wool, and woollen goods; the imports are timber, oak, bark, hides, butter, cheese, and large supplies of grain for malting. The latter forms now a principal feature in the imports; large vessels of 600 or 700 tons may be seen discharging here at one time. Communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns on the Frith is afforded by steam packets throughout the year, and the ferry steamboat crosses every hour to South Alloa on the opposite side of the Forth where are extensive timber yards and sawing and planing mills, and also a terminus of a branch of the Caledonian railway. A free shipping tidal port is formed at this part of the Forth. The great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit, show this locality as eminently eligible for the purpose, as is proved by the fact of the large number of vessels daily arriving. Alloa is well supplied with railway accommodation. The North British line from Stirling divides here, one branch going to Dunfermline and one to Kinross, and now by means of the Forth and the Tay bridges the express trains between Glasgow and Dundee pass this way. In 1878 an Act was obtained in Parliament for the purpose of making a railway from the South Alloa branch of the Caledonian line to the town with a bridge over the Forth, the undertaking being promoted by an independent company, backed by the Caledonian Company, who subscribed £40,000 of the necessary capital. The foundation stone of the bridge was laid on the 5th of April, 1882, and has been successfully completed. It consists of seventeen spans, two of 100 feet, two of 80 feet, and thirteen of 68 feet, the piers on which the girders rest rising to a height of 24 feet above high water mark. In the fairway of the channel are two opening spans of 60 feet each which turn on a massive central pier, consisting of six cylindrical columns, to permit of vessels passing up and down the river. Each of the girders was tested with a pressure reaching to 2 cwt. to each foot of space. All are of malleable iron, of such quality as will bear a tensible strain of 22 tons per square inch before fracture, and of 11 tons per square inch when in permanent way. The bridge, which has one line of rails, is 17 feet in breadth outside, and 14 feet inside the girders; the estimated cost of the line and bridge was £64,000. Messrs. Watt & Wilson, of Glasgow, were the contractors. With this improved train service both by the North British and Caledonian Companies, a new and most commodious joint station has been erected a little east of the old one, at the head of Primrose st.

The parish church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 24th of June, 1819, forms one of the most prominent objects in the town. It is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, being raised at an expense of £8,000. The spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by public subscription; the Earl of Mar considerably improving it by giving a bell and a fine clock. St. Andrew's chapel of ease, in the early English style of architecture, and presenting a simple though massive appearance, was opened on the 26th of November, 1882. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, a Baptist chapel, a handsome Episcopalian church with a peal of bells, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one for Swedenborgians. The Alloa Hospital, which was instituted in February, 1867, mainly through the liberality of the late Earl of Kellie, is designed for the medical and surgical treatment of persons in the county of Clackmannan suffering from disease or accident. A detached building is available to the local authorities of the burgh and parish of Alloa for the reception of persons suffering from infectious diseases. It is under the management of a committee who are annually appointed from the subscribers, and is supported by voluntary subscriptions. Of educational institutions, the first to be mentioned under the School Board is the Alloa Day Home, which, in addition, was formerly a ragged school, and was instituted on the 29th of January, 1884, to aid in securing the elementary education of poor and neglected children in Alloa by providing superintendence and one or more meals a day. Children under 14 years of age, of both sexes, and of all denominations, are eligible for admission. There are three other Board schools — the Burgh school, the Ludgate school, and the Academy, besides which there are also a Roman Catholic, an Episcopal, the Paton Endowed, and two ladies' schools. In winter three curling clubs—the Alloa Club, the Prince of Wales Club, and the Alloa Park Club, meet on their respective ponds to practise the "roaring game." The town is well supplied with gas, the Alloa gas works, which were up to 1887 in the possession of a private company, being now the property of the Commissioners, having been acquired by them at a cost of £23,250, the amount fixed by the valuators. Until 1822, the town was very badly supplied with water, but in that year a supply was obtained from a large artificial loch known as Gartmorn Dam, which covers 160 acres of ground; and in 1867, the supply being again inadequate, two large filtering beds were constructed in addition, the water being conveyed to the town through 10-inch and 12-inch main pipes; the total cost of the waterworks up to the present time is £6,000.

Alloa, in its immediate neighbourhood, presents scenery at once beautiful, bold and picturesque. On the north side is the range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and which are, perhaps, unrivalled in Scottish landscape; whilst the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour. Stirling Castle on the west, and the Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east, present to the eye a panorama of no common loveliness. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place. They forfeited the earldom by their participation in the rebellion of 1715, but the title and privileges were restored in June, 1824. Alloa Tower was the residence of this family. It was a quadrangular building, but was in 1800 destroyed by fire, and the square tower now standing is all that remains of the ancient structure, though it is still a place of great strength. The walls are eleven feet thick, and the highest turret is eighty-nine feet. It was built by the sovereigns of Scotland previous to the thirteenth century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. It has frequently been the resort and residence of royalty. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary spent a portion of her youth and maturity with the Mar family, her son James also passed many of his youthful days here, having been committed by his mother to the then Earl of Mar; and his son, Prince Henry, received a part of his education in this building under the celebrated George Buchanan. The prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive, and worthy the attention of the tourist and stranger. The Tower is now uninhabited. Alloa House, now forming the residence of the Earl of Mar and Kellie, stands a short distance eastward from the Tower, and was erected in 1834, but has since been much added to and improved. Alloa market is held on Saturday. Cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, May, April, August, and November, all new style; and a hiring fair on the second Saturday in October. The parish of Alloa is in the Presbytery of Stirling, and embraces an area of 5,499 statute acres, with a population, in 1871, of 9,940, and in 1881 of 11,628, the burgh at the latter period containing 8,812.

CAMBUS is a small village situated on the Forth, in the old parish of Tullibody, two miles W. from Alloa and five from Stirling. It is also a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British Railway, and the branch line to Alva here joins the main line. The river Devon here discharges itself into the Forth, and there is a pier where small vessels are enabled to discharge and load. Brewing and distilling are extensively carried on here. Population in 1881, 209.

SOUTH ALLOA is a village and seaport in the parish of Airth, situated on the south bank of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, in the county of Stirling; it is crossed by a ferry. There is a branch of the Caledonian railway to this place from Larbert for goods traffic.

SAUCHIE (New and Old) are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parishes of Alloa and Clackmannan, nearly two miles north of Alloa, on the road to Alva. There is an Established church here, which was built in the year 1844, and the district is now formed into a quoad sacra parish. A great number of colliers, employed by the Alloa Company, reside in these villages, and there is a Sunday school for their children maintained by an endowment known as Lady Charlotte Erskine's. A fine Board school, with accommodation for 360 scholars, has been built at FISHCROSS, where the Sauchie railway station is, and also one at HOLTON at the other end of the district, to replace the old colliery school. The station here is on the Devon Valley section of the North British Railway.

TULLIBODY parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation, and the village is situated two miles W. from that town. The ancient kirk of Tullibody, the date of which is 1549, was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character. In the year 1559 it was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie, Esq. of Tullibody, and occasional services are now held in it. There is also a very neat Free church, erected in 1845, adjoining the old kirk, and there is a Board school in the village. CAMBUS is the nearest railway station. Population in 1881, 694.

ALVA.

THE burgh of Alva, which is now a thriving one, is in the parish of that name, and is also a station on the Alva branch of the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British Railway. The town is seven miles E. from Stirling, three and a half N. from Alloa, two W. from Tillicoultry, and five W. from Dollar, charmingly situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a stream that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic and interesting glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of the falls issues from an aperture in the rock above and tumbles from a height of forty feet in one unbroken mass into a naturally formed basin below. An excellent pathway has been formed through the glen, which tourists now visit from all quarters. The parish is connected judicially with Stirlingshire, but politically with Clackmannanshire, and is surrounded on all sides by the latter county, except the north, where it is bounded by Blackford, in the county of Perth. It affords excellent pasture, is well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, such as silver, copper, iron and lead. Sir John Erskine, of Alva, about the year 1715, assisted by some miners from Leadhills, discovered a very rich vein of silver, in a romantic glen, about midway between Alva House and the town. The precious metal made its appearance in small threads, which, upon being followed, led to a very rich mass of ore; some of it was so rich that fourteen ounces of ore yielded twelve ounces of silver. So easily was the deposit of treasure reached, that not more than £50 sterling had been expended on it when the prize was found; and during the space of a little more than three months it is said that ore was obtained from which Sir John drew from £40,000 to £50,000. After this mass was exhausted, the ore became so scarce as not to repay the expense of working, and hence the enterprise was abandoned. In the year 1767, Lord Alva, nephew to Sir John Erskine, caused a pair of communion cups to be made, for the use of the church of Alva, from some of the remains of that ore then in his possession. On these the following inscription is engraved: "Sacris in Ecclesia S. Servani, apud Alveth, A.D., MDCCLXVII., ex argento, indigena, D.D.CQ.—Jacobus Erskine."

The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of shawls, tweeds, tartans, &c., is carried on in the town and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills; these, with their tall chimneys, exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. In 1876 the inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act, and in 1880 the Burgh Gas Supply (1876) Act. Under the powers thus acquired, improvements of great importance have already been completed, and there is no doubt that the adoption of these acts is a boon to the inhabitants. In the town is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and there is also a Savings Bank. The House of Alva, the residence of the Johnstone family, but which has been occupied for some years by the Dowager Countess of Aberdeen, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Woodhill, about two hundred and twenty feet above the bed of the Devon, which flows westward to join the Forth in the valley below, and fourteen hundred feet below the apex of the mountain. From the summit, which rises to an elevation of 1,770 feet above the sea level, the eye sweeps over an immense range of picturesque and interesting scenery, stretching all the way from the German Ocean on the east to the Campsie hills on the west, and includes among other attractive objects the Lammermoor chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's Seat, the Pentland Hills, and the lovely and elastic winding of the Forth. Perhaps the most interesting object for an antiquarian in the whole parish of Alva would be the well of St. Serf, or Servanus, the tutelar saint of the district, which continues to pour out its bright and sweet waters in the minister's glebe at a little distance from the parish church. In 1874 public baths and washhouses were erected at the west end of the town, at a cost of about £4,000, the gift of the late Laird of Alva, James Johnstone, Esq., who also, about the same time, presented the inhabitants with a public park; and in 1873 a new cemetery was provided by the Parochial Board, which has been tastefully laid out and arranged. The Town Hall, a plain structure, erected about 1840, by public subscription, and enlarged in 1871, will accommodate an audience of about 1,000 persons.

The places of worship are Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. The parish church, of composite architecture, was first built in 1631; a stone in the west side of the church, with the date over a coat of arms, refers to the erection of the original structure. In 1815 it was wholly rebuilt, and in 1854 it underwent a considerable extension. A stone in the east side marks the date and gives the initials of the late James Johnstone, Esq. at whose expense the extension was carried out. In the belfry is an old bell which was stolen from its place and lost sight of for a number of years, but through the exertions of the late Mr. Johnstone, was ultimately recovered. The inscription upon the bell is somewhat illegible, but seems to be as follows.—"They who me giveth are David Johnkin, William Bell to Alva Kirk; curs'd be that wretch who me perverteth from sacred use or else doth sell. Anno 1633." The parish is well provided with schools, and in addition to the Board Schools there is one for infants, supported by Mrs. Johnstone, of Alva House. Alva parish is in the Presbytery of Stirling, and contains an area of 5,458 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 5,113, the burgh containing 4,961 of that number.

CLACKMANNAN,

WITH THE HAMLET OF KENNET.

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of the county and parish of that name, though not now entitled to that rank from either its size, population or commercial importance, was at one period a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior facilities for commerce possessed by that place, it has sunk into comparative insignificance. The name is believed to be derived from the Gaelic word Clack, signifying the kirk town, and annan the name of the lords of Annandale. It is 32 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, and two S.E. from Alloa, pleasantly situated on an eminence gently rising to the height of nearly two hundred feet above the level of the Forth. The surrounding scenery is very delightful, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this tower was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is eighty feet high, and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a spiral staircase. The sword and helmet of the illustrious Bruce were formerly kept in the tower, but in 1796 they were bequeathed to the late Earl of Elgin by the widow of Henry Bruce, of Clackmannan, and are now preserved at Broomhall, Fifeshire. This venerable lady, who was a devoted adherent of the Stewarts, with the sword of King Robert in her hands, was wont to assume the privilege of conferring knighthood, and when Burns the bard visited her he was honoured in this way, the old lady observing that "she had a better right to make knights than some folks." She died at the advanced age of 95 years. In the centre of the town is a square tower and a portion of the west gable of an old building, which was formerly the county court-house and gaol. It was fast going to ruin, but in 1865 was restored and furnished with a new clock having transparent dials, through the liberality of the late Francis Horne, Esq., and is now an ornament to the town. Close to the tower is the market cross, which, although a relic of bygone days, is in a good state of preservation. Mention may also be made of a whinstone, which is to be seen at the Cross, upon which the king is represented to have frequently sat. To save this stone from spoliation of virtuosos, a number of gentlemen were at the expense of elevating it on the top of a stone pillar ten or twelve feet high. A public hall capable of accommodating about 450 persons was erected in 1888, at a cost of about £1,500. The principal trade of Clackmannan is that derived from the coal mines worked by the Clackmannan Coal Co., which find employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes. A large woollen factory, employing about two hundred hands, has been erected near the river Devon by Messrs. John Paton, Son & Co. of Alloa. Tun and vat building is also carried on here, and at KILBAGIE, a short distance from the town, is a paper mill. The soil of the parish in the carse is considered the richest arable in the shire, and under the best state of cultivation. Kennet House, the residence of Lord Balfour of Burleigh, is a short distance east from Clackmannan, and is a fine modern mansion, occupying a beautiful and commanding site. There are two ports, one at Clackmannan and the other at KENNETPANS, where coals are extensively shipped. Clackmannan is a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British railway. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. The first mentioned, erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500, is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of 1,200 persons. There are five public schools in the parish, with an average attendance of 800 children. The parish of Clackmannan is in the Presbytery of Stirling. KENNET is a hamlet in the parish. Cattle fairs are held on June 26th and September 4th, if a Tuesday, if not, the Tuesday following, but of late years they have been very poorly attended. Acreage, 9,427. Population of the parish in 1881, 4,518; of the town, 1,501.

DOLLAR,

WITH GLENDEVON AND MUCKART (PERTHSHIRE), AND THE VILLAGES OF POWMILL AND BLAIRINGONE
(PARTLY IN KINROSS-SHIRE AND PERTHSHIRE.)

DOLLAR is a parish and village, situate at the base of the Ochil hills, near their eastern extremity, on the road from Stirling to Kinross, 9 miles from Clackmannan, 7 from Alloa, 12 from Stirling, and 12 from Kinross. The climate is very mild and salubrious. A great proportion of the consequence this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to its Academy, which was erected and endowed by the munificent bequest of John Macnab, a native of the parish, who, though originally a herd boy, acquired by industry and perseverance a large fortune. He died in January, 1802. By his last will he directed that one half of that fortune (about £90,000) should be vested in the public funds, or some such security, in order that it might yield an annual income "for the endowment of a Charity or School for the Poor of the Parish of Dollar." The bequest was made to the ministers and elders of the parish, for the time being, as trustees. The sum thus bequeathed so far exceeded the requirements of the case that the trustees wisely laid the foundations of the institution on a broader basis. After a protracted litigation in Chancery, a very handsome edifice was erected in 1819, and masters appointed to teach the Greek and Latin languages, together with English, French, and other modern tongues; mathematics, natural philosophy, geography, botany, drawing, writing, arithmetic, fencing, gymnastics, music, &c. The Academy, designed by Playfair, and to which extensive additions have subsequently been made, is a large and handsome Grecian building with a portico, the pediment supported by six massive columns of the Doric order. In the centre of the building is a large hall, containing the library with upwards of 6,000 volumes. These books are lent to pupils and residents in Dollar free of charge. The number of pupils at the present time (1888) is about 700, a considerable portion being boarders from various parts of the United Kingdom. Many pupils after completing their studies have risen to eminent positions in life. The scheme of education is regulated so as to prepare either for the universities, for commercial pursuits, or for civil engineering. The entire staff of the institution embraces the head master and nineteen teachers. Boarders are received by the head master, most of the masters, and other respectable residents. The constitution of the institution has recently undergone considerable alteration, under a scheme prepared under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882. Primary education, hitherto provided for in the Academy, has devolved upon the School Board, who are at present (1888) erecting a handsome school; while the institution has been reserved entirely for secondary education, the course of study in it commencing with Standard V. (Scotch Education Code.) There are separate departments for boys and girls. Bursaries of various amounts are awarded annually by competitive examination. The Board of Governors consists of 11 representatives—viz., one elected by the minister and kirk session of the parish of Dollar; two by the Commissioners of Supply for the county of Clackmannan; one by the Commissioners of Supply for the county of Kinross; three by the School Board of Dollar; one by the Senatus of Edinburgh University; one by the Senatus of St. Andrew's University; one by the School Boards of Alloa burgh and Tillicoultry, alternately; and one by the School Boards of Clackmannan and Alva, alternately. The session commences in September and closes at the beginning of July. There are also several excellent private educational establishments in Dollar, for younger children, which prepare pupils for the course of instruction at the institution.

Dollar now boasts a goodly number of genteel houses and elegant villas, a respectable hotel, and numerous well-furnished shops. Cottages and villas are let for the summer season. It has also four handsome churches—Established, Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian. The parish church was erected in 1841, and is a neat edifice with a square tower rising from the main gable. There are also a commodious mission hall, a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and extensive bleachworks, the property of William J. Haig, Esq. About a mile from the village is the venerable ruin of Castle Campbell, once one of the chief residences of the Argyll family, and which was taken in 1645 by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock, and in the hill itself is a remarkable chasm, called "Kemp's Score," which still bears some marks of a stair. Originally called "Castle Gloom," the name was changed by Act of Parliament in 1489, to its present designation. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the tourist for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery. The view from the top of the ruin is singularly beautiful and extensive. Though the castle stands upon an eminence, it is surrounded on all sides, except the south, by some of the loftiest of the Ochil hills, which rear their summit to a height of over 2,000 feet above the sea level. The name of John Knox, the Scottish reformer, is intimately associated with Castle Campbell, and a ruined archway, formerly one of the outworks of the castle, is popularly, though erroneously, known as "John Knox's pulpit." In the autumn of 1864 application was made by the people of Dollar to Sir Andrew Orr, the proprietor of the estate, for permission to construct a new footpath, making access to the ruin more easy, and opening up some of the most wild and beautiful scenery imaginable. The desired permission was readily granted, and after an expenditure of £300, provided by subscription, in the month of May, 1865, the path was opened. It is fully a mile and a half in length, and embraces, besides the land scenery, a number of beautiful waterfalls. The attractions of the place have thus been greatly increased. Half-yearly fairs are held here on the second Monday in May and third Monday in October. The parish of Dollar, which has an area of 4,773 acres, is bounded on the north by Glendevon, on the east by Muckart and Fossoway, and on the west by Tillicoultry; in 1881 it contained a population of 2,500.

MUCKART is a parish in Perthshire, 8 miles from Dollar, 11 from Alloa, and 18 from Crieff. It is triangular in shape, and its length from east to west is about 5 miles, its greatest breadth from north to south about 2¾ miles. The Devon forms its principal boundary, separating it from Fossoway on the south and east, while on the north and west two small streams separate it respectively from Glendevon and Dollar. A branch of the Ochil hills runs east and west along the northern boundary of the parish, terminating on the east by a conical-shaped hill called Sea-mab, 1,442 feet above sea level. The Devon in this neighbourhood displays a number of interesting waterfalls, amongst which are the falls of RUMBLING BRIDGE, DEVIL'S MILL, and CALDRON LINN. The water passes through fissures in the rocks, which in many places present the appearance of having been rent asunder. When viewed from the parapet of the Rumbling Bridge, 120 feet above the level of the river and over 500 feet above the sea level, the scenery beneath, on both sides, is such as not to be often met with, large numbers of visitors being drawn to the spot; and since the opening of the Devon Valley branch of the North British Railway, for which there is a station, this locality has become much frequented. In 1645 every house in Muckart parish, including the church, was burnt by the Marquis of Montrose, when he sacked and destroyed Castle Campbell, at that time belonging to the Earl of Argyll. Besides the parish church, which is at POOL, a small village, there is an United Presbyterian church, one of the oldest in the denomination, and also in the centre of the parish a Board school. The soil of Muckart is in general light and gravelly, but in some parts it is more retentive. Rumbling Bridge is the nearest railway station. Acreage, 4,928. Population in 1881, 601.

GLENDEVON is a parish in Perthshire, situated about 6 miles from Dollar, 14 from Alloa, and 15 from Crieff. It is pleasantly situated in a glen, the Ochil hills bounding it on the north and south. The Devon runs through the village, and in the neighbourhood there are some very beautiful falls; the river also abounds in trout, and in the season anglers have good sport. There is also a mill here for wool spinning. The Dunfermline and Inverkeithing waterworks are situated in this parish. The only antiquity is Glendevon Castle, now in a good state of preservation, and which was formerly an outpost of the Douglas family. The only church (the Establish-is situated about a mile from the village. The nearest railway station is Rumbling Bridge, about 3½ miles distant. Fairs are held on first Wednesday in June, second Thursday in August, fourth Thursday in September, and third Thursday in November, chiefly for sheep and wool. Acreage, 9,483. Population of the parish in 1881, 147.

BLAIRINGONE and POWMILL are hamlets in the parish of Fossoway, which is partly in Kinross-shire and partly in Perthshire, distant about 2½ and 4 miles respectively from Dollar, their post town.

Blairingone was erected a parish quoad sacra about the year 1855. The church is a plain stone edifice, built in 1836; the interior was recently refitted at considerable expense. It was chiefly owing to the liberality of the late Mr. Wylee, of Arndean, that the parish was endowed, and at his death he bequeathed a further sum to increase the living. The parish has a School Board of its own, and there is a good public school situated near the church. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. The nearest railway station is at Dollar.

TILLICOULTRY,

WITH COALSNAUGHTON.

TILLICOULTRY, a parish and burgh, four miles N.E. of Alloa, two miles E. of Alva, and three W. of Dollar, is pleasantly situated on the east side of the Ochil hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kinross -nine miles from the former and 15 from the latter town. The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Gaelic word Tullich-cut-tiz, signifying the hill at the back of the country. It is well supplied with excellent water from a stream that issues from the hills immediately behind the village. The river Devon, when not far from its source, and when flowing eastward, forms the northern boundary of the parish of Tillicoultry; and after pursuing a circuitous course of about 14 miles beyond the parish, again enters it running eastward, and cuts its arable plain into two nearly equal parts. The town of Tillicoultry is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufactures established here, and likewise at DEVONSIDE, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, clan tartans, tweeds, &c. In these branches the town and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a very large number of the industrious class. The inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act in 1871, and the town is now governed by nine Commissioners, having a chief magistrate at its head. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established in the town. In 1878, the late James Archibald, Esq. presented to the Commissioners the sum of £1,500 for the erection of a tower and spire to the Popular Institute, which is situated on the north side of the town, to which have now been added an illuminated clock and bell. An Orphanage was founded by the liberality of the late James Paton, Esq., who bequeathed £5,000 towards the endowment of such an institution. The building, which is situated at the north side of the town, was opened on the 21st March, 1879, and is capable of accommodating 30 inmates. The parish abounds with coal, which is profitably worked. The Devon Valley branch of the North British railway runs through the parish, and has a station about half-a-mile from the town. The scenery of the neighbourhood is as interesting as that of any part of this county. Benclench, the loftiest of the Ochils, rises directly to the north of the town, to the height of 2,300 feet above the level of the sea. The view from the summit of this mountain is very grand and extensive. The hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals, and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company; the metal sold at £50 per ton, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable. The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the town, and the remains of a Druidical circle on the south end of a rising ground lying to the east of it, called Cuninghar. In 1862, two urns, each about 18 inches in diameter, and the same in height, containing human bones, were found in making excavations about 150 yards from this circle. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, one belonging to a congregation of the Evangelical Union, and one for the Congregationalists, the latter erected in 1876, at a cost of about £3,000. The parish church is almost a square building, situated on rising ground at the east end of the town. It is in the Gothic style of architecture, the buttresses terminating in lofty and tastefully carved finials. Handsome Board schools were erected in the centre of the High street in 1875, at a cost of about £3,000. COALSNAUGHTON is a small hamlet in the parish of and about a mile from Tillicoultry, where there are Board schools (erected in 1871), and a mission church. The parish of Tillicoultry is in the Presbytery of Dunblane, and embraces an area of 6,946 acres. In 1881 it had a population of 5,344, the burgh containing 3,732.

DUMBARTONSHIRE,

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently Dun-bartonshire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the west it is separated from Argyleshire by Loch Long, Perthshire touches its northern extremity, the county of Stirling bounds it on the east and also on the north, Lanarkshire on the south-east, and the Clyde separates it from the county of Renfrew on the south. The figure of this country is rather singular; it describes almost a perfect crescent of semicircle, protruding on the south and south-west, its concavity being filled through its whole extent on the north and north-east by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles, while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad; the parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling. This severed portion of the county is twelve miles long by from two to four and a half broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. The entire shire embraces an area of 270 square miles, or 172,677 acres. In point of size this county stands as the twenty-seventh, and in population as the fourteenth.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In ancient times the name of the shire was Levanach, signifying "the country of Leven," which was corrupted in the course of years to Levenax, and more latterly to Lennox. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacottic or Eithaeacti, a word importing "dwellers along the extremity of the wood." The descendants of this people were not enslaved or expelled from their hunting grounds by the Romans; they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde, and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying "the hill of the Britons." This region, until the early part of the last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior, and were finally extirpated or reduced to quiescence and subordination only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom, called Alwyn, the son of Arkil, was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, developed upon Charles II., as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times great improvements have been effected in this country, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the country; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last sixty years, a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. A century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland—bleachfields, about that period, making their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven. About 1768 the first printworks were established on the Leven, but now calico printing and Turkey-red dyeing are very extensively pursued at several places. Ship building, both iron and wood, is a branch of some importance, as is also the manufacture of chemicals. Until 1831 the glass works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat, but they have now ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom, but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some coal and ironstone, the two latter, though wrought, yielding but a small return. The soil is various, consisting in the north and west of mountain and moor, and south and east of Loch Lomond, of deep black loam, clay, gravel and bog and peat. The climate generally is good, along the vale of the Leven and the Clyde it is mild, but on the Kilpatrick Braes and among the mountains of Arrochar and Luss the cold is rather severe, and stormy weather is experienced.

MOUNTAINS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county. Of the former the chief are those o Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and abound with moors, mosses and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are of much less height, Ben Voirlich, adjoining Perthshire, having the greatest altitude, rising 3,300 feet above the level of the sea. The other principal elevations are Ben Vane, 3,004 feet; Ben Eich, 2,302 feet; Ben Breach, 2,233 feet; Ben Reoch, 2,168 feet; and Tullich, 2,075 feet. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton Castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs, among which are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland is that of Loch Lomond. It lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque. On Inch Cailoch (or the island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church, and on Inch Murrins (or the island of St. Murrinus, two miles long, and converted into a deer park) are the ruins of a house once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms. It abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon; the purity of the stream and the richness of its banks soothe the mind of the traveller, while the bleachfields, printworks and cotton mills, the villages, hamlets, and gentlemen's seats scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district. The Forth and Clyde Canal, about 35 miles in length, extends from Grangemouth on the Forth to Bowling on the Clyde. The North British Railway traverses the western division of the county, and the Edinburgh and Glasgow (North British) the eastern division, through which also runs a branch of the Caledonian line.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into 12 parishes, ten of which orm the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—Dumbarton—and four burghs of barony. The only contributory burgh, or that which in conjunction with others is represented in the Senate, belonging to the county is Dumbarton; it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow, styled the Kilmarnock Burghs, in returning one member to the Imperial Parliament. The present member for the county is Sir Archibald Orr Ewing, Bart., of Ballikinrain, Stirlingshire. The parliamentary constituency for 1887-88 was 10,603. The lord-lieutenant of the county is Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, Dumbartonshire. According to the census returns for 1871, the population of the shire was 58,857, and by those for 1881, 75,333. The valuation of the county for 1887–88 was, exclusive of churches, railways, and canals, £87,212; of churches (landward), £2,141 railways (landward), £68,560; total, exclusive of the burgh of Dumbarton, £444,913.

ALEXANDRIA,

BALLOCH, BONHILL JAMESTOWN, KILMARONOCK, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ALEXANDRIA is an increasing town, on the west side of the Leven opposite to Bonhill. On the banks of the river are several extensive print works. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthful and pleasant. The town consists of several well-built streets, and about a mile from it stands Tullichewan Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of James Campbell, Esq., from which an extensive view of the river, and of the vale through which it winds is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria is the neat mansion of Broomley, which is also the property of the same gentleman, and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful residence of Patrick B. Smollett, Esq. The places of worship here are one of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a chapel each for the Wesleyan Methodists and Roman Catholics. There are two good Board schools—one in Main street, and the other known as the "North Public School," the latter an imposing structure, erected in 1884, and elegantly fitted up in the most modern style. The Ewing Gilmour Institute, consisting of library, reading and recreation rooms, is a splendid new building, presented to the town by W. Ewing Gilmour, Esq. This handsome edifice, which is superbly furnished, cost about £12,000. A handsome public hall is centrally situated, at the bridge end; there is also a fine drinking fountain in Main street, erected in 1870, in honour of the late Alexander Smollett, Esq., of Bonhill, by his friends and tenants. Population in 1881, 6,175.

BONHILL is a thriving little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles W. from Edinburgh, 18 N.W. from Glasgow, 3 N. from Dumbarton, and within one mile of the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond; situated on the east side of the Leven, and connected with Alexandria by an iron suspension bridge. Very considerable business is done here in calico-printing; and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well-built street. About the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church, a fine building, of Gothic architecture, with a square tower, containing a handsome clock. It was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. A Free church, erected in 1844, is an elegant building of red freestone, with a tapering spire; in 1885 it underwent restoration. It occupies a commanding site, a little to the south of the parish church. On a gentle eminence near the new bridge is a United Presbyterian church, erected in 1859. In 1836 a fine suspension bridge of iron was thrown over the Leven; the span is 438 feet, and its cost, with the approaches, £2,200, which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, of Bonhill. The inhabitants have made attempts to do away with the charge for crossing (one halfpenny), but have failed. The land on both sides of the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which together with respectable residences and recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February for horses. Population of the town in 1881, 2,940.

BALLOCH is situated at the south end of Loch Lomond, and about a mile north-west from Bonhill; it is the terminus of the North British Railway. In 1842, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, erected an elegant suspension bridge across the Leven water, previous to which passengers were greatly inconvenienced by the ferry then in use. This bridge is twenty miles from Glasgow, by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. Balloch Hotel is beautifully situated at the foot of the "Queen of the Scottish Lakes," and at an easy distance from the railway station. A fair is held at Balloch on the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in April for cattle, and on the 15th of September for horses—the latter being the largest fair in Scotland. Population in 1881, 112.

KILMARONOCK is a small parish adjoining that of Bonhill, and is situated about 5 miles N.E. of that village. It contains nothing worthy of note but the parish church, an United Presbyterian church, and two Board schools. Acreage, 10,325. Population in 1881, 927.

RENTON is a large village in the parish of Cardross, one mile S.W. from Bonhill, the like distance S. from Alexandria, and two N. from Dumbarton, most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the village; on its banks are two extensive print works. A monumental column, bearing a Latin inscription, is here erected to the memory of the celebrated historian, Tobias Smollett, who was born here. It is a round pillar of stonework, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected by the descendants of that talented individual. The Victoria Institute, built in 1887, at a cost, including the library, of about £2,000, is a substantial structure, and was opened on Her Majesty's Jubilee day. It consists of a library of from 3,000 to 4,000 volumes, reading and recreation rooms, and also forms a first-rate working men's club. Messrs. William Stirling & Sons, P. B. Smollett, Esq., and Messrs. Turnbull & Co. largely contributed towards its erection, the remainder being raised by public subscription. In the village is an Established church and three Free churches, and also a Board school. A public hall, situated in Main street, was erected in 1882. In 1881 Renton had a population of 4,319.

JAMESTOWN, with a population of 2,171 inhabitants, is a thriving modern village, a mile distant from Bonhill, on the road to Balloch; extensive calico printing works are in operation here. There is a neat church of the Establishment and a Board school, and also a public hall and recreation rooms, presented to the village in 1884, by Sir Archibald Orr Ewing, M.P.

CUMBERNAULD,

CONDORRAT, DULLATUR, CASTLECARY, CROY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village in the parish of its name, in a detached portion of the county, 33 miles W. from Edinburgh, 29 E. from Dumbarton, 14 N.E. from Glasgow, 15 S. from Stirling, 9 W. from Falkirk, 7 E. from Kirkintilloch, and 7 N. from Airdrie; situate on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of railway between Glasgow and Edinburgh. The weaving of checks and other striped fabrics by hand-loom for the Glasgow manufacturers is carried on here; but the staple business of the district is mining, there being several coal and lime works and many quarries of good freestone in the neighbourhood. The parish church is at the west end of the village, occupying a commanding site, and embosomed among trees; there is also a commodious Free church, erected in 1826. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription newsroom. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House. The annual fair is held on the second Thursday in May, for cattle, horses, &c. The parish of Cumbernauld has an area of 11,635 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 4,270; of this number the village claimed 1,064.

CONDORRAT is a small village in the parish of and about 3 miles W. from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the coal and ironstone mines and quarries situated here, although some are still engaged in hand-loom weaving. Population in 1881, 715.

CASTLECARY is a small hamlet situated about 2 miles N.E. of Cumbernauld, but in the county of Stirling. CROY is also a small village in the same county, and distant from Cumbernauld about 3 miles. There is a station at each of the above places on the North British railway.

DUMBARTON,

WITH CARDROSS, DARLEOCH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON is a royal burgh, the capital of the county and of the parish to which it gives name; 59 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 N.W. from Glasgow, 8 S.E. from Helensburgh, and 3 S. from Bonhill, situated on a low piece of ground encompassed on its western quarter by the Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloven into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to a height of more than 300 feet. The fortress is entered by a gate at the southern base of the rock, and here are situated the guardhouse and lodging for the officers, from whence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, and two large tanks always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of military unctionaries. The house of the governor is judiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic. The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail. Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the rivers Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year Parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 merks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity. The burgh has greatly improved since 1855, when the Harbour and Police Acts were adopted. The present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form around the head or west end of the peninsula; there are some by thoroughfare lanes and detached houses, and an extensive suburb on the west side of the Leven, leading to Renton. It is connected with the latter by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching 300 feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious dock have been constructed by Messrs. Denny Brothers. A pier of pitch pine, the property of the Dumbarton corporation and erected at a cost of £12,000, was opened in May, 1875. It extends 765 feet from the base of the Castle rock, southwards, towards the channel of the river Clyde; the gangway is six hundred and forty feet in length and fifteen feet broad, and the pier head is ninety feet long and twenty-five feet wide. The depth of the river at the extremity of the pier head is ten feet at low water, so that steamers are able to touch at the pier at all states of the tide. The streets, shops and houses are lighted with gas supplied by the corporation. The town is plentifully supplied with water, from the Long Craigs, and the drainage is being rapidly completed. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass, but that branch was finally extinguished in 1848. The discontinuance of this source of industry proved a serious drawback upon the previous prosperity of the town, for when these works were in active operation they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 15,000 tons of coal, besides employing a large tonnage of shipping, and paid from £40,000 to £50,000 excise duties per annum; the property is now in other hands, and the engineering establishment of Messrs. Denny & Co. occupies a portion of the premises. The principal trade, and on which the prosperity of the town now chiefly depends, is that of ship-building, which is carried on here extensively and with great spirit, and at which about three thousand men are employed. There are three extensive yards. Brewing, tanning, ironfounding, and sail and rope making are also carried on to a limited extent. In High street are branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. The British Linen Company have also opened a branch bank, in Strathleven place. Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II. in the year 1221, and its privileges (including its right of fishing in the Leven) were confirmed by a charter of James VI. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and nine councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Tuesday and Friday during session, the sheriff small debt court every Tuesday during the session, and on vacation court days. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May and August, and last Tuesday in October. The burgh unites with Renfrew and Port Glasgow in returning one member to parliament. Renfrew is the returning burgh. The original County and Burgh buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000; the accommodation being found inadequate, in 1863 the interior was entirely reconstructed, and two spacious wings also added, at a cost of £5,170. They form a noble structure, and contain convenient court rooms, with every suitable office; the gaol is placed at the rear of the court house, but it is not now used, the prisoners being sent on to Glasgow. A combination poor house was completed in 1865, at a cost of about £7,000, increased accommodation being supplied from time to time. It is situated on the outskirts of the town, in a healthy and pleasant locality.

At the east end of High street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was perfected in 1811 at a cost of £6,000. A district parish church has been erected at the east end of the town, called Knoxland church; it is a fine edifice, in the Gothic style, and cost about £4,500. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, an Episcopal church—a splendid stone edifice, erected in 1873 at the east end of High street and Church place—and an Established church at Dalreoch, a neat new stone building. A mission hall has been erected at a cost of £500, situated in Church st; there are also Wesleyan Methodist, Baptist and Roman Catholic chapels. All that remains of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Duchess of Albany and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Patrick, is one of the tower arches, which has been removed and placed at the entrance of the late Burgh school, in Church street, the original site being required for the formation of the Dumbartonshire railway, which passes in the immediate vicinity of this once extensive pile. The principal educational establishment is the Burgh Academy, a truly eminent institution of long standing. The late building proving insufficient for the growing requirements of the town, a much larger erection was provided through the liberality of the council and inhabitants. The style is French Gothic of the thirteenth century, the building presenting a frontage of 132 ft. adorned by a beautifully ornamented central tower 140 feet high. Above the Academy are the rooms pertaining to the Dumbarton School of Art, inaugurated November 25th, 1884, and in the rear of it is a large public hall, embracing every convenience, and capable of accommodating an audience of about 750. The interior of the building was entirely destroyed by fire in 1882, and has since been handsomely refitted and furnished with all the newest scholastic appliances. The expense of erection of both buildings was about £6,000. There are also three Board schools, erected at considerable expense; a Roman Catholic school, and an Episcopalian school, a stone building, constructed upon the newest and most approved system, situated in Risk street; the cost, including the grounds, was £5,000, which was defrayed by Richard D. Buchanan, Esq. Dunglass Castle, Bowling. There are three weekly newspapers established here—the Dumbarton Herald, the Lennox Herald, and the Dumbarton Observer. There is a free circulating library and reading room in High street. A new public park, called Levengrove Park, and covering about 35 acres, has been presented to the town by Peter Denny, Esq. of Helenslee, and John Macmillan, Esq. of College Park. It is pleasantly situated, and bounded by the Clyde and Leven, the grounds being tastefully laid out. The cost was about £20,000, and it was opened May 30th, 1885. A cattle market is held on Wednesday, which is well attended; there is also a large cattle fair held on Carman Moor on the first Wednesday in June. Population of Dumbarton in 1871, 11,429, and in 1881, 14,172.

CARDROSS is a small but respectable village in the parish of its name, situate four miles W. from Dumbarton, on the road to Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the Reformation the church of Cardross was a rectory, belonging to the Cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsula promontory formed by the Leven and the Clyde; the present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower. This district is very pleasant and salubrious, and the situation of the parish eligible for business. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many respectable families, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery. The parochial school here, likewise a Free church, are handsome stone buildings. The North British railway have a station here. On Castle Hill are the remains of the residence of Robert Bruce, from whence he could behold his army encamped below. Population of the parish in 1871, 7,080, and in 1881, 9,365.

HELENSBURGH WITH ROW,

CLYNDER, GARELOCHHEAD, RAHANE, ROSENEATH, GLENFRUIN, SHANDON, COVE AND KILCREGGAN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony and seaport in the parish of Row, 22 miles W.N.W. from Glasgow, nine S. from Luss, and eight N.W. from Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which place it is five miles distant. The town, which is a perpetual feu from Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777, and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable watering place on the Clyde; it now consists of a series of handsome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and improved plan. The accommodation for visitors is equal to that of most watering places; numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families or individuals resorting hither in the summer. There is a superior and convenient hotel, called the Imperial, opposite the old pier, and another some distance east of the town, called the Queen's, which has been licensed since the beginning of the century. A public library, circulating libraries, and reading rooms are also in the town. The quay, erected in 1817, and in 1872 greatly enlarged, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river. The North British Railway Company in 1882 erected a new station and pier at Craigendoran, about a mile and a half eastward of the town; steamers run in connection with the trains for the west coast. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of the burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in 12 commissioners. A Police Court is held each Monday, and at other times when required.

Helensburgh was created a quoad sacra parish in 1862, the west quoad sacra parish being constituted in 1872. The places of worship are—two of the Establishment, an Episcopal, a United Presbyterian, and two Free churches; also chapels for Congregationalists, Baptists and Roman Catholics. There are three Board schools, one of which, the Hermitage, is a fine structure; there are also several respectable boarding academies in the town. At the distance of two miles, in a westerly direction, is Roseneath Castle, a seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyll; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situate Ardencaple Castle, the birth-place of the present Duke of Argyll. A portion of the castle is of ancient date, but the greater part is comparatively of modern erection. It commands a good view of the Clyde and Gare Loch, which flows between these splendid mansions, to a distance of seven miles into the mainland; and in the vicinage of the town, near the banks of the Clyde, are several elegant seats and residences. The following public buildings are worthy of note: The Municipal Buildings, in East Princes street, is a handsome modern edifice, embracing court hall, council chamber, and general public offices, with police station and cells in the rear; the new Victoria Hall, Sinclair street, built by subscription at a cost of £6,000, is used for concerts, public meetings, &c.; the new hospital in King street, erected at a cost of £3,000, contains under one roof a hospital for infectious diseases, and one for non-infectious cases, each having a separate entrance and distinct airing grounds. The Bank of Scotland, situated in West Clyde street, is a fine stone building in the baronial style of architecture, erected at a cost of £3,000; the Union Bank, Limited, in Colquhoun square, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, in James street, are also both handsome stone structures. A new park, opened to the public through the liberality of William Kidston, Esq., and the late Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., is situated at the foot of the Gare Loch, and commands an excellent view of Roseneath Castle and the surrounding scenery. In the neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for twenty-five years the celebrated Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels. The first trip ever made by steamboat in this division of the globe was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh, by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer; he was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow, April 7th, 1767, died at his house (now the Queen's Hotel), in Helensburgh, November 14th, 1830, and was interred in the parish churchyard of Row, where has been erected a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits conferred by him upon his species, by rendering subservient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully "combats the fickle wind and stems the flowing tide;" there is also a handsome obelisk on the esplanade, which has been erected to his memory. In 1871 Helensburgh had a population of 5,975 persons, and in 1881, 7,693; this number is, however, greatly increased by visitors during the summer months.

Row is a small romantic village in the parish of its name, situated on the eastern margin of the Gare Loch, about 2 miles W. from Helensburgh. The parish of Row is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character, and the low grounds are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands in the village, near the Ferry across Gare Loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projecting into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word Rhu signifying a point. The parish, exclusive of a narrow strip on Loch Long, is about six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by Luss on the east, Helensburgh on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch, and its south end is washed by the Firth of Clyde. Acreage, 20,126. Population of the parish in 1881, 9,972.

SHANDON, about 3 miles N. of Row, is a district containing some fine villas and mansions, and a large hydropathic establishment, much frequented during the summer months. Here is a Free church. A little to the north of Shandon is FASLANE, where are the ruins of an old chapel, surrounded by the remains of an ancient churchyard.

GARELOCH VILLAGE, about 6 miles beyond Row, is prettily situated at the head of a loch, a screen of hills rising behind separating the Gareloch-head from Loch Long. The interesting and beautiful GLENFRUIN is approached from here. This romantic place is studded with many seats of the gentry, who make this neighbourhood their favourite resort from June to September. Facing the pier, where the pleasure steamers arrive and depart, stands the Garelochhead Hotel, where every comfort and accommodation can be obtained. About a mile and a half on the road to Arrochar, on an eminence called "Whistlefield," splendid views may be had of Lochs Goil and Long and the Gare Loch. Population in 1881, 460.

ROSENEATH is a parish of 8,461 acres, occupying the peninsula of that name, extending for about 7 miles from east to west, and from one to four broad. The parish church, a small but neat modern edifice, is within a quarter of a mile of the ferry and pier, and the parochial school is adjacent. There is also a Free church in the neighbourhood, and a United Presbyterian church at CLYNDER, which latter place and RAHANE are districts in this parish, the former 1 mile and the latter 3 miles N. from Roseneath village. Roseneath Castle, already noticed, is the principal object of interest. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,994.

About 2 miles over the hills is the burgh and village of KILCREGGAN, and a mile further west, at the entrance to Loch Long, is the kindred village of COVE; both are resorted to for sea bathing, and consist of a series of villas and mansions extending for some miles along the shore; at each is a pier for the convenience of passing steamers. The places of worship are an Established church, a chapel of ease, and a United Presbyterian church. Population of Kilcreggan and Cove in 1881, 816.

KILPATRICK,

BOWLING, LITTLE MILL, MILTON, DUMBUCK, DUNGLASS, DUNTOCHER, HARDGATE, FAIFLEY, DALMUIR, CLYDEBANK, KILBOWIE, YOKER, RADNOR PARK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILPATRICK (OLD, or WEST) is a post village, in the parish of its name, 53 miles W. from Edinburgh, 10 W. from Glasgow, and 5 E. from Dumbarton, situated on the road between the two latter-named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. The name Kilpatrick signifies the "Church of Patrick," but in this case tradition varies from fact, the former authority stating it to be the "cell," while the latter proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite. It is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birthplace of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland. The traditionary record asserts that, at the age of sixteen, this individual was carried off from this then civilised Roman district by a band of Irish marauders, who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the "Ecclesia Hibernica" distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital. The visit strengthened the connection that had priorly existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the place has not the advantage of any manufactory. At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a square tower and clock, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village are a Free church and an United Presbyterian church, and there is also a Board school at Gavinburn. Population of the parish in 1881, 8,768; of this number the village contained 910. In 1888 the estimated population of the parish was 18,800, and of the village 1,300.

BOWLING is a small village about three-quarters of a mile west from Kilpatrick, with a station on the North British railway. At Bowling Bay commences the Forth and Clyde canal, which, after traversing 35 miles in an eastern direction, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German Ocean with the Western Channel. This great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th July, 1790. Vessels drawing eight feet of water, having a nineteen feet beam, and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble junction. The Trustees of the Clyde Navigation have also a harbour here, for the accommodation of vessels laid up during winter, or otherwise for sale. In the village is a Free church, erected in 1869; there is also the Buchanan Institute, comprising library, reading and recreation rooms. This handsome building, which has cost about £1,000, was opened December 13th, 1884, being the munificent gift of Andrew Buchanan, Esq., Auchentorlie.

At LITTLE MILL is a distillery and ship-building yard.

At DUNGLASS, half a mile west of Little Mill, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification, or a Roman boundary, and in the castle grounds a stone memorial pillar of Henry Bell, the eminent engineer, who ran the first steamboat on the Clyde in 1813.

MILTON and DUMBUCK are on the road to Dumbarton; at the former place is a paper mill and a Board school, also Milton House, the residence of Henry M. Napier, Esq. which is pleasantly situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde. Estimated population of Bowling and Little Mill in 1888, 1,000, and of Dumbuck and Milton, 700.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, situated two miles north from Kilpatrick. The principal part of the town is lighted with gas. The Established church was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700. The other places of worship are a Free church at Hardgate, an United Presbyterian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel; there is also a Board school—a handsome stone building—and a Roman Catholic school. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

"PONTEM. HUNC. EXIT.
RUI. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
ÆL. ANTONIN. HADR.
AUG. P.P. QUINT LOLL.
URBIC LEG. FERE. COL.
LAPSUM. RESTITUIT.
DOMINUS DE BLANT-
IRE. A. ÆR. CHR,
M.D. CC. LXXII."

which is thus translated:—"This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Ælius Antonious Adriannus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant; being almost ruinous, it was restored by Lord Blantyre in the year 1772." A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch tower, visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestige of them now remains. The water works at Cochna, constructed in 1874, supply Duntocher, Dalmuir and Clydebank with water, the area of the water district is 2,560 acres. HARDGATE is about a quarter of a mile east from Duntocher, and FAIFLEY about the same distance north thereof. Population in 1881, 1,594: Estimated population in 1888, including Hardgate and Failley, 3,000.

DALMUIR is a village about one mile and a half from Duntocher. Here are several genteel residences, pleasantly situated on elevated sites, commanding fine views of the Clyde and the surrounding country. There are also engineering and calico printing works here.

RADNOR PARK is a new village, equidistant from Dalmuir and Kilbowie stations, being about three quarters of a mile from either. Estimated population in 1888 of Dalmuir and Kilbowie, 3,000.

CLYDEBANK is a rapidly increasing district and was erected into a Burgh on the 21st December, 1886. It includes Dalmuir, Kilbowie, and Yoker, the population in 1888 being estimated at about 12,000. The municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and nine commissioners, James R. Thomson, Esq. being elected first provost. A branch line of railway from Clydebank to Partick was opened in December, 1882, and continued on to Yonkhill, February, 1885; at Stobcross Junction this line joins the underground railway for Glasgow (Queen street.) Messrs. J. & G. Thomson's large ship building yard and engineering works are situated here, covering thirty acres of land, and giving employment to 4,000 men.

At KILBOWIE are the extensive works of the Singer Manufacturing Company, recently erected, which cover 46 acres of ground, and employ about 8,000 persons. The places of worship are the Established church, Hamilton Free church, erected in 1884, the Clydebank Union church, built in 1877, and a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1886. The largest and most handsome Board school in Scotland, is erected here, being able to accommodate 2,600 scholars. A new public hall, affording accommodation for an assembly of 1,000 people, was opened in September, 1884, attached to which is a public library and reading room. KIRKINTILLOCH, LENZIE, WATERSIDE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKINTILLOCH (formerly Kirkintulloch) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, situated in a detached portion of the county 40 miles W. from Edinburgh, 20 S.S.W. from Stirling, 16 E. from Dumbarton, the like distance W. from Falkirk, 7 N. from Glasgow, the like distance W. from Cumbernauld, 5 S.W. from Kilsyth, 4 S.E. from Campsie, and 5 S.E. from Campsie Glen. It is situated on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin, and is understood to derive its name from the locality, the original designation being Cairpentulloch, signifying in Cambro-British the fort on the head or end of the hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the banks of the Kelvin. The wall of Antoninus passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little west of the parish church; the site of a fortress called "Peel" is even to this day recognised by a deep moat. A handsome monument of red Aberdeen granite was, by public subscription, erected on the bank of the Luggie, near the bridge, to commemorate the heroic endeavours of a young gentleman named Hazleton Robson, of Glasgow, to save a child's life who had fallen into the river, but who, however, failed in the attempt and lost his own life. The monument bears a suitable inscription. About a mile to the east of the town, on the Inchbelly road, is the martyr's stone, commemorative of John Wharry and James Smith, who were captured at Stevenson Wood, Inchbelly, and taken to Glasgow, where they were first tortured, then executed, and afterwards carted out to Inchbelly wood, where they were shot out coffinless into the moss and buried. The inscription states that they suffered at Glasgow for their adherence to the Word of God and Scotland's covenanted work of reformation. Kirkintilloch (which is the largest parish in the shire) and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here, but not to so great an extent as formerly, the inhabitants being now chiefly employed at the different chemical and iron works on the canal bank. There are also coal & ironstone mines in the neighbourhood. The monetary transactions of the burgh are facilitated by branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking, the Forth and Clyde canal passing through the town affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coast of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch Railway, which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochnie Railway about a mile from that town, has its terminus here; this line also joins the Garnkirk and Glasgow Railway. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile south of the town, and near this is LENZIE JUNCTION station. Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony, its first charter having been conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cumming, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town was formerly governed by a senior and junior magistrate, otherwise bailies, ten councillors, treasurer, and town clerk, but in 1871 the inhabitants adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862, and their affairs are now administered by a body of 12 police commissioners. Gas works were erected by a private company for lighting the place, but were acquired by the town under the Burgh Gas Supply Act, 1876. The Court House and Gaol, which form a substantial building at the cross, is ornamented with a tower and spire, containing a clock with four dials. Burgh police courts are held fortnightly, or more frequently if occasion requires. The magistrates act also as dean of guild, in erection of new buildings, &c.; justice of peace courts are held only as may be required, and the sheriff's small debt circuit court on the first Thursday in March, June, September and December. The parish church, which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship in Kirkintilloch comprise the quoad sacra parish church of St. David's, two Free churches, one United Presbyterian, an Original Secession church, a Methodist, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel.

In LENZIE there are an Established church, a Union (Free and U.P.) and the Episcopalian church. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, and October 20th for cattle and horses. The following public institutions in the neighbourhood are worthy of special notice, viz.:—The Barony Parish Lunatic Asylum, at Woodilee, Lenzie, in connection with the Barony Parish, Glasgow, was opened on 22nd October, 1875. The style of the extensive buildings is Elizabethan, the architects being Messrs. James Salmon and Son. The whole range is over 700 feet long and 450 feet broad, occupying about 6½ acres of ground. Their cost has been £150,000. The estate altogether extends to 382 acres, costing over £30,000, making a total of £180,000, and was bought by the Barony Parochial Board, in 1852, at the price of £56 per acre. The principal external features of the Asylum are two massive and handsome towers, each rising to the height of 150 feet from the centre of the building, and a very elegant fleche which surmounts the chapel, which is seated for 400 persons. Its principal window is fitted with three divisions of stained glass, representing Faith, Hope, and Charity, the work of

Mr. Ballantine, of Edinburgh. The dining hall is also a very commodious apartment. In it 500 persons can be supplied at one sitting. The recreation hall, on the second flat of the building, is a room about 90 feet long by 60 feet at the broadest part, and is fitted with a spacious platform for musical and dramatic entertainments. There are in all 110 single rooms, and dormitory accommodation for 500 other patients. The administrative department is so arranged that it can be easily extended so as to provide for 800 or 1,000 patients. At Westermains is also a private asylum, of which Mr. Jas. Lawrie is proprietor, possessing every necessary requisite for those mentally afflicted. The Glasgow Convalescent Home is situated at Lenzie, about half-a-mile to the south-east of the Railway station, and is capable of containing 62 patients. The Glasgow Royal and Western Infirmaries and the subscribers to the Home have the privilege of recommending the general public as patients. The Broomhill Home, for the relief of incurables for Glasgow and the West of Scotland, is situated at Kirkintilloch, and spends for the aid of such persons in their own homes £100 a month. The boundaries of the Burgh were a few years ago extended to include the eligible building ground in close proximity. The entire parish of Kirkintilloch comprises an area of 7,146 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 10,591, the town having of this number 8,029.

ARROCHAR, TARBET (LOCH LOMOND), INVERARNAN, INVERSNAID, ROWARDENNAN, ARDLUI, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village, in the parish of its name, 69 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 28 N.N.W. from Glasgow, 13 N.N.W. from Dumbarton, 10 N.N.W. from Bonhill, and 9 N. from Helensburgh; most delightfully situated on the western margin of the justly-famed Loch Lomond. The only business of consequence is the Camstraddan and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond to Balloch, and thence by rail. If healthiness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss; but that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble loch, on the margin of whose pellucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible heightens the interest of this charming spot. Steamboats sail every day (Sunday excepted), from the south end of the loch, calling at Balmaha, Luss, Tarbet, Rowardennan for Ben Lomond, Inversnaid, &c., returning the same afternoon. Here resided the learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language; and on the opposite side of the loch, near Drymen, lived for a considerable time Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Strone hill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About 2½ miles S. of Luss is Rossdhu House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss. It is a handsome building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church was dedicated to Saint Mackessog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stone was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelar saint of this part of the country. The places of worship here are one of the Establishment and a Free church. There is a Board school at Luss, and a parochial school at Muirland. A fair is held here on the third Tuesday in August. Acreage 24,206. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 719.

ARROCHAR (more properly Arroquhar) is a parish lying between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly 16 miles in length by 3 in breadth. The village, which is situated at the head of Loch Long, is 10 miles N. from Luss, and about 1½ W. from Tarbet. In the parish is the celebrated Loch Sloy, much resorted to by tourists. The Established church is a neat structure. Acreage 25,858. Population in 1881, 517.

TARBET is a much famed hotel and small village on Loch Lomond about 8 miles N. from Luss, and, to distinguish it from Tarbert on Loch Fyne, in Argyleshire, is generally designated Tarbet on Loch Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or the "cobbler," is best seen near to the hotel, and Ben Lomond in front of it. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about a mile and a half, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such that a person may leave Glasgow, proceed by rail to Balloch, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbet, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long, and up the Clyde. ARDLUI is the terminus of the Loch Lomond steamers. The Rowardennan and Inversnaid hotels are on the opposite side of the loch. Passengers alight at Rowardennan pier for Ben Lomond. There is a Free church and a Board school in the village.

NEW KILPATRICK, OR BEARSDEN,

CANNIESBURN, GARSCADDEN, MILGAVIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW (or East) KILPATRICK is a parish partly in this county and partly in that of Stirlingshire; its extent is upwards of six miles from north to south, by a breadth of from two to four miles, and contains 12,050 acres. A branch line of railway traverses the parish, leaving the main line at Maryhill, and terminating at Milngavie, the station for New Kilpatrick being called Bearsden, and as the place is generally known by that name, letters should be addressed accordingly. The merchants and others engaged in commerce in Glasgow, possess many handsome residences here, occupying elevated sites and commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. The Forth and Clyde canal intersects it in its northern part, entering the district on crossing the Kelvin, by a stupendous aqueduct bridge. The district was separated from Old Kilpatrick, which bounds the parish on the west, in the year 1649. The church is six miles N.W. from Glasgow, and is a neat building, erected in 1807. The Reformatory for Girls at East Chapelton is a fine stone building, erected in 1883. Garscube House, the residence of Lady Campbell, is the principal seat in the neighbourhood; it is pleasantly situated on the west side of the Kelvin. CANNIESBURN is about a quarter of a mile S. from Bearsden station. GARSCADDEN is a district about 2 miles N.W. from New Kilpatrick. Here is a Board school. Garscadden House, the residence of John Ker, Esq., LL.D., is a fine old manorial structure, situated in a well timbered park. Population of New Kilpatrick parish in 1881, 7,414

MILNGAVIE (popularly called Millgay) is a thriving manufacturing burgh, in the parish of New Kilpatrick, but locally situated in the county of Stirling, 12 miles E. from Dumbarton, 5 E. from Duntocher, 21 S.W. from Stirling, 7 N.N.W. from Glasgow, 51 W. from Edinburgh, and 2 N.E. from New Kilpatrick. In the village is a paper mill, and in the neighbourhood are two bleach fields, a dye works, and a distillery. Here are Established and United Presbyterian churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Mission room belonging to the Episcopal church. The country around is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many respectable family mansions. Population returned with the parish.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire in the south of Scotland, bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk, on the north-west by Ayrshire, on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright, and on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Firth, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburghshire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south east, is nearly fifty-five miles, and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peebleshire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys it embraces an area of 1,103 square miles, or 705,946 statute acres of land. In size Dumfries is classed as the eighth and in population as the thirteenth Scotch county.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgovæ, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the river Dee, in Galloway. These people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries. During the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantyre effected a settlement, and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cambria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the country was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursions and reckless feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out under Charles I., the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrection. Attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families; and humbler causes have conspired to extinguish many names of great local interest. The Maxwells were completely ruined by the attainder of the Earl of Nithsdale, in 1715. The Douglases of Queensberry and the Johnstons of Annandale have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Buccleuch has risen to the greatest prosperity and influence of any family in the South of Scotland. From being thus so frequently subjected to the horrors of early invasion and predatory warfare, and being so partitioned into baronies, the shire exhibits, even to this day, the remains of some very important castles and places of security.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &C.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow or white sandstone, with dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the lands; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions; marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes, and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlockhead, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts in the south of Scotland, there is a general mixture of arable and pasture land. The soil is of great variety, that in the south being a light covering over a rocky and gravelly subsoil, producing thin crops; but in the north, where the subsoil is peaty, vegetation is rank. This county is famed for agriculture, its capacities in this respect being highly developed. The land is well tilled and drained, strongly fenced, and produces good crops of oats, potatoes, turnips and hay. About 216,130 acres are under cultivation. Though changeable and moist, the climate is upon the whole mild and salubrious.

The following are the principal eminences in Dumfries-shire, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—

IN NITHSDALE DISTRICT.	FEET.
Wardlaw (in Caerlaverock)	826
Auchinleck	1,500
Wanlockhead (village)	1,564
Cair-Kennow (near Drumlanrig)	2,080
Queensberry Hill	2,250
Black Larg (border of Ayrshire)	2,890
Lowthers (near Wanlockhead)	3,150

IN ANNANDALE DISTRICT.	FEET.
Annan Hill	256
Repentance Tower	350
Brunswick Hill (Tundergarth parish)	740
Erickstane Brae	1,118
Loch-Skene	1,300
Hartfell (near Moffat)	2,629

IN ESKDALE DISTRICT.	FEET.
Moss Paul (Inn and Stage, Vale of Ewes)	820
Langholm Hill	1,204
Timnis Hill	1,366
Wisp (in Ewes)	1,940
Etterick, or Phawhope Penn	2,220

In Annandale the improvement in the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meeting some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers and bullocks are exhibited. The number of oxen, sheep and pigs nurtured in this county is invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; and exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place; and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides, and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having greatly improved within the last sixty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous a state as those of any other district of Scotland. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county; the principal branches under this head are the manufacture of hosiery goods and tweeds, the chief seat of these being its capital. There are also distilleries, agricultural implement works, dyeworks tanneries, &c. This county is also noted for bacon curing, a large number of carcases of pork being cured annually.

RIVERS, &C.—The chief, indeed the only rivers of consequence, are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk. From these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith, sixty miles in length, rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncone hill, in the parish of Kirkconnel, and descends into the valley of Sanquhar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchan from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Firth. Near to Jarborough Castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds called "Bow-butts," where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practise archery. The river Annan, the length of which is forty miles, takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in this course it receives the Evan and the Moffat waters and the Wamphrey stream, which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name. Passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Lochmaben it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous. The Esk, thirty-five miles long, in its progress through the district is joined by the Black Esk, the Maggot, the Ewes, and the Wauchope. After reaching Broomholm the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Firth; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburghshire, and the Line water from the county of Cumberland; the entire length of its race is about thirty-eight miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of "Firths;" its waters are shallow, and have long, sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and that is particularly the case during the spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west, and borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—even the most experienced persons are liable to be overtaken by the tides when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety. The principal lines of RAILWAY now in operation are the Glasgow and South-Western and the Caledonian, with their branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATIONS, &C.—The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, almost the whole of which belongs to the noble family of Buccleuch; ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcudbright. The district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdiction. Up to the era of the Reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-four parishes, which are divided into five presbyteries and one synod. There are four royal burghs in the county—Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar, and Lochmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerbie, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Moniaive. The shire at large sends one member to Parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcudbright in returning another representative. The present member for the county is Sir Robert Jardine, Bart. of Castlemilk. The parliamentary constituency for 1887-88 numbered 9,341. The lord lieutenant is the Duke of Buccleuch, K.T. According to the census returns for 1871, the population of the county was 74,808, and by those of 1881, 76,140. The valuation of the shire was in 1887-88, including royal and parliamentary burghs, but exclusive of railways, £556,771, and of railways, £60,754.

ANNAN,

BRIDEKIRK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ANNAN, the capital of the district of Annandale and of its parish, is an ancient Royal burgh, 79 miles S. of Edinburgh, 87 S.E. of Glasgow, 43 N.E. of Kirkcudbright, 27 S. of Moffat, 16 S.E. of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan, situated on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Firth, and upon the Glasgow and South-Western and Caledonian railways, on which lines there are stations. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic word An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Veromum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruin, and the original wall formed part of the gaol and the old town hall. Upon the death of David II., in 1371, this castle, Lochmaben, and the lordship of Annandale, came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went with his sister Agnes to the Dunbars, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglases, who lost it by similar conduct; and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebellion against his brother, King James III., and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1484, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the King, and became the great key to the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI. of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V., dated 1st of March, 1538, which stated that Annan had with other towns been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1298, when they entered Annandale and burned the town with its churches. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and fifteen councillors, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Sanquahar, Lochmaben, and Kirkcudbright in returning one member to Parliament. The port or harbour of Annan is free, and vessels of 250 tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town; at this place are wooden wharves or jetties. Vessels generally make the passage between Annan and Liverpool within 12 hours, that is, in one tide only, from harbour to harbour. The convenience afforded by the rapidity of communication with Liverpool has greatly increased the trade, and a considerable quantity of bacon, grain, live stock, and other commodities are conveyed to and from the Liverpool market. Among the other branches of trade are those of tanning and bacon curing, also a large bone grinding mill, owned by Messrs. T. & G. Tweedie; these works give employment to a number of hands; there is also a distillery situated about one mile north of the town. In 1879 a working men's reading and recreation room and temperance coffee palace was opened by the Marchioness of Queensberry, who was also the promoter. Branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, and the Bank of Scotland, are settled here; there is also a bank for savings. Limestone and freestone are abundant in many parts of the parish, which has been long famed for the superior quality of the potatoes cultivated within it. Palmer's Nurseries, now of world-wide repute, are situated just outside the town, and cover more than 120 acres.

Annan of late years has been much improved by new streets and buildings, and now possesses a very handsome town hall, built on the site of the old one in High street, at a cost of upwards of £4,060. The old bridge, consisting of five arches, was removed in 1826, and a neat and substantial one erected on its site, towards which a grant of £3,000 was obtained from Government, and the remainder supplied by the county. On the west are the town hall and market place, and at the east end of the town is a fine church, built of stone, with a tower and spire. A Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels are the other places of worship. The Board schools, and several private ones, are well conducted; but the principal educational establishment is a classical academy, which was erected in 1820. In it is taught most of the elegant and all the useful branches of education, and the preceptors consist of classical and other masters, and teachers in the several branches. Annan is proud of being the birthplace of the Rev. Edward Irving, founder of that sect of Christians called Irvingites, and Hugh Clapperton, the African traveller. The town is now plentifully supplied with water. The reservoir, in which the water for the use of the town is stored, is situated on the farm of Purdomstown, in the parish of Middlebie, situated about 7¼ miles from Annan. It has a capacity of holding 27,000,000 gallons. The filter bed and supply tank is behind Landheads toll bar, 2 miles from the town, and is able to pass 150,000 gallons per day. The ceremony of opening the waterworks was performed by Lady Augusta Noel, wife of Ernest Noel, Esq., then M.P. for the Dumfries district of burghs, on July 21st, 1881. The total cost was about £12,000, Messrs. Brebner & Fleming, Edinburgh, were the contractors.

An excellent newspaper, the Annandale Observer, is published every Friday, of which Messrs. William Cuthbertson & Son, High street, are the proprietors. The market is held on Friday, at which, during the season, large quantities of pork are sold. There are also two cattle marts. Fairs are held on the first Friday in May, the first Friday in August, and the third Friday in October. The acreage of the parish is 10,915, with a population in 1881 of 5,516, the town containing 3,366 of that number.

BRIDEKIRK is a village, 3 miles N. of Annan, situated on the west bank of the Annan river. The proprietor was the late Mrs. General Dirom, through whose interest it was erected into a quoad sacra parish in May, 1836, and the same lady built the church in 1835. The remains of Bride-Kirk are in this parish. Population in 1881, 702.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH,

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANKEND, KELTON, GLENCAPLE QUAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of CAERLAVEROCK occupies a sort of peninsula formed by the Solway Firth, the river Nith, and Lochar water. The magnificent ruin of Caerlaverock Castle stands on a level plain, between eight and nine miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western Marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I. in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress, and fell into decay. It now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. Lord Herries is the owner of nearly the whole parish. Kirkconnell here is the residence of Sir James Anderson, Knight, who commanded the "Great Eastern" when she successfully recovered the lost ends of the Atlantic cable. The places of worship comprise two churches—one of the Establishment at Caerlaverock, and one of the Free Church, at Glencaple Quay. There are three endowed schools in the parish. The population of Caerlaverock parish was in 1881, 1,046.

BANKEND is a clean, pleasant village, about seven miles from Dumfries, containing a parochial and grammar school, which is also a boarding academy.

GLENCAPLE QUAY, on the banks of the Nith, in this parish, is a clean, neat little village, where in former times numbers of coasting traders discharged and took in their cargoes for various parts of the United Kingdom, and passengers from Liverpool usually landed here. It is now chiefly used as a bathing place, to which it is extensively resorted in summer time. KELTON is likewise a small seaport village on the Nith.

CUMMERTREES,

POWFOOT, CARRUTHERSTOWN, DALTON, MOUSEWALD, RUTHWELL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village—the latter, clean and neat, is 84 miles S. of Edinburgh, the same distance S.E. of Glasgow, 22 N.W. of Carlisle, 13 S.E. of Dumfries, 10 S.E. of Lochmaben, the same distance S. from Lockerbie, 6 from Ecclefechan, and 4 from Annan, situated on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, on which line there is a station at the village. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, containing 9,466 acres, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Firth. It is a flat, fertile and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village. About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is POWFOOT, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,094.

DALTON is a parish and small village between 3 and 4 miles N.N.W. from Cummertrees, and about 2 N. from Ruthwell station. The parish, which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth, with about 6,686 acres. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones to the memory of the Ross family, descendants of the ennobled house of Ross of Halkhead, who were long resident in this parish. About a mile from the village is Dormont House, beautifully situated within a deer park on the banks of the Annan, the seat of W. F. Carruthers, Esq. CARRUTHERSTOWN is a small village in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 579.

MOUSEWALD is a parish and village—the latter about 6 miles S.E. from Dumfries, lying between that town and Annan. The kirk, which is close to the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, long since laird of Mousewald. In 1887 William F. Carruthers, Esq., of Dormont, proprietor of the village, introduced a gravitation supply of water, and presented it to the inhabitants. Acreage, 5,889. Population in 1881, 558.

RUTHWELL is a parish and village—the latter about 3 miles N.W. from Cummertrees and 2 miles from Ruthwell station, close to which is the new post office, erected in 1886, which is the postal centre of a wide district. This place is a barony, and is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants availed themselves of these rights. It was in early days celebrated for the manufacture of salt; but this art has not been practised for some time. Near the shore is the brow, well and hamlet, where Burns spent several of the last weeks of his existence. The kirk and manse of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from that village. In 1887 the ancient Runic monument, so dear to antiquarians, which stood in the manse grounds, was removed therefrom, and for better preservation placed in a new wing built into the church, admission to which is at all times free. The parochial school is at CLARENCEFIELD. About a mile from Ruthwell, in the parish of MOUSEWALD, is Mount Kedar, where stands a monument erected to the memory of the Rev. Henry Duncan, D.D., late minister of Ruthwell. The memorial, which is of stone, consists of an arched base and pyramid, forty feet in height; on the base an inscription states that he was the founder of the system of savings banks, and was born in 1774, and died in 1846, after being minister of Ruthwell parish for forty-four years, when he closed in communion with the Free Church of Scotland. A Free church and school house are situated here. About a mile from the station is Comlongon Castle, an ancient border keep, and a modern mansion, one of the seats of the Murrays of Cochpool, now Earls of Mansfield. The parish of Ruthwell has an area of 8,693 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 868.

DORNOCK, GRAITNEY (OR GRETNA),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DORNOCK is a parish and village—the latter a small one, in the district of Annandale, Dumfries-shire, 84 miles S. of Edinburgh, 18 S. of Langholm, 17 S.E. of Dumfries, 12 S.E. of Lockerbie, 7 S. of Ecclefechan, and 2½ E. of Annan; situated on the high road from the latter town to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Firth, where there is good sea bathing. The parish, which is about two miles and a half square, contains about 4,626 acres, and is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient erection, called Stapleton Tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish. It is now the summer residence of John A. Critchley, Esq. Robgill Tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robgill, stands in the same parish, and with the lands attached are now possessed by Robert Paterson, Esq. At a short distance from the village there are the remains of a Roman military road and Druidical circle, or temple. On what was formerly a moor in the parish, a battle is traditionally said to have been fought between the English and Scotch, in which the former were defeated and their two commanders slain. Two stones in Dornock churchyard, each 6½ feet long and two broad, and raised in the middle like a coffin, mark the place of their reported interment. On these tombs hieroglyphics are cut, which have hitherto puzzled the antiquarian. The kirk and the parochial school are in the village. Besides an Established church there are two parochial schools in the parish. The population of the parish was in 1881, 814.

GRAITNEY (more popularly called Gretna), is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish, the acreage of which is about 7,863, comprehends the old parishes of Gretna and Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Gretna, or Gretna Green, is situated on the road from Annan to Carlisle, by Longton, eight miles and a half from the former, and nine miles and a half from the latter town, and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. The Glasgow and South Western and Caledonian Railways pass through the parish, and there is a station contiguous to the village. This place was long noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages. Any person could perform the ceremony, which merely amounted to a declaration, before witnesses, that the parties were man and wife, such an acknowledgment being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland. By a certificate being subscribed by the officiating priest and witnesses the union became quite indissoluble. The fee charged varied according to circumstances and the means of the party—from half a guinea to £40, and even £50 has been paid. Bills were brought into the House of Lords to alter the law of Scottish marriages, and more especially the Gretna Green contracts, but they were not carried further than to require that if the parties belong to any other country, one of them must have resided seven days in the kingdom of Scotland before they can be so joined together. The first of these convenient priests was a fisherman named Coulthard. He kept a ferry boat, before any high roads were made through the country. The following was the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, was furnished:—

"KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, COUNTY OF DUMFRIES, PARISH OF GRETNA."

"These are to certify to all whom these presents may come, that A.B., from the parish of———-, in the county of———, and C.D., from the parish of———, in the county of———, being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were this day married after the manner of the laws of the Church of England, and agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

"As witness our hands at Gretna Hall, &c., &c."

About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participated in this matrimonial trade. This village, as also that of Gretna, belongs to the Maxwell family. At SARKFOOT, about a mile from the latter village, is good bathing ground. About two miles west from Gretna is the small village of RIGG, where there is a dissenting chapel. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,212.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Graitney. The kirk and parochial school, which stand at the southern end of the parish, are about three miles from Gretna. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones, amongst others a sarcophagus, bearing a Latin inscription and eight shields of arms, to the memory of William Coulthard, chief of his name, who was resident in the parish till near the end of last century. About one mile from the village is Moss Knowe, the residence of William Graham, Esq., a very fine and stately mansion. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat. The Caledonian Railway, which runs through the village, has a station here, Population in 1881, 1,461 acreage, 11,529.

DUMFRIES,

MAXWELLTOWN, TERREGLES, TROQUEER, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. of Edinburgh, 72 S.E. of Glasgow, 183 S. by W. of Aberdeen, 60 S.E. of Ayr, 32 N.W. of Carlisle (by railway), 15 N.N.W. of Annan, and 8 S.W. of Lochmaben. It is situated on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, and there is a station for the line about a quarter of a mile from the town, of which the Caledonian Railway Company have a portion. The branch of this company joins the main line at Lockerbie. Dumfries, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Firth, and is navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. There exists no record whereby to ascertain the date when the town was founded, or the etymology of its name. Drum-a-frish—Dun-fries—Drumfries and "Dumfries" have successively been its appellation—Dun, a castle, and fries, shrubs, is a plausible compound for the original name. Under whatever circumstances Dumfries was founded, it was undoubtedly a place of considerable size long before the days of William the Lion, and in his reign it was erected into a royal burgh. The site of this Queen of Nithsdale is singularly picturesque, stretching along the bank of the Nith at an elevation sufficient to command a rich prospect terminating at the distance of a few miles in a chain of lofty hills, either cultivated or umbrageous to their summits. There are so many attractions in and around Dumfries that the gentry of the neighbouring counties resort to it, imparting vivacity and all the delights of good society. The ancient monastery of Greyfriars, in this town, was the scene of a remarkable tragedy about the middle of the fourteenth century; this event was connected with the assassination of the Red Comyn (a powerful chieftain who formerly held the Regency of Scotland) by Robert the Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of Bruce's adherents.

Amongst the improvements of modern times may be named the erection of a suite of assembly rooms, market places, the widening of Bank street, and lighting the town with gas; a spacious quay has been constructed along the side of the town; and a fine Doric column raised by the county of Dumfries, to the memory of Charles, Duke of Queensberry, who died in 1778, adorns the centre of the burgh. A very handsome statue of the poet Burns has been placed in Church place, close to Greyfriars church, which was unveiled by Lord Rosebery on the 6th April, 1882, amid great rejoicings. The figure, which is cut in Sicilian marble, and was executed at Carrara, from a model designed and prepared by Mrs. D. O. Hill, is represented in a position between sitting and standing, the head being slightly turned towards the right shoulder. A daisy is held between the finger and thumb of the left hand, the right hand being hidden beneath the folds of a shepherd's plaid, which is carelessly thrown over the shoulder. The statue, which was defrayed by subscription, is placed on a plain pedestal of dark grey granite, at a height of about nine feet from the ground. A Corn Exchange was opened on the 14th March, 1877, at Whitesands, by the firm of Messrs. Fotheringham and Wallace, seed merchants. The Court House and County Buildings are large elegent erections, in Buccleuch street. The old Gaol, which joins the Court House, has been sold and a new one erected in Maxwelltown for the joint use of Dumfries-shire, Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtonshire. The building, which is large and handsome, was opened August 15th, 1883. Messrs. J. Crackston & Son, Dumfries, were the contractors. On the site of the old gaol in Buccleuch street, a handsome post office was completed and opened for business in the early part of this year (1889). It is of the celebrated Dumfries-shire red stone, from designs supplied by the architect to H. M. postal authorities, Edinburgh. There is on an elevated site a new infirmary, a noble and spacious building, which is an ornament to the town. Circuit courts of justiciary are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright and Wigtonshire; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriff's and justiciary burgh courts. The station of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway is an important erection, giving animation to the south-eastern suburb of the town. The Theatre is a neat building of stone, with a projecting portico; the interior is tastefully decorated. It was here that Kean first emerged from obscurity to fame, and he never forget the early patronage of the denizens of Dumfries.

An important line of railway from Dumfries now goes through Castle Douglas, Gatehouse, Newton-Stewart, to Stranraer and Portpatrick, thence by steamer to the coast of Ireland, which is but twenty-one miles distant from the last-named town. The principal imports are timber, hemp, tallow, coal, slate, iron and wine; the exports consist of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool and freestone, the latter being worked at Locharbriggs, three miles distant from the town. The manufacture of woollen tweed is very extensively carried on here, and next in importance is the iron trade, the Dumfries Iron Works, of which Mr. James B. A. M'Kinnel, is proprietor, being one of the largest structures of its kind in the south of Scotland. The making of agricultural implements is the staple trade at these works, although steam boilers, railway contractors' wagon wheels, cranes, &c., are only a few among other articles manufactured. Considerable business is also done in the hosiery trade, brewing, tanning, the manufacture of glue, &c. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for bareskins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. Several branch banking companies afford facilities for the monetary transactions of the town. The principal hotels are the King's Arms, the Station, The Queensberry Arms, and lastly the Globe, where the famous bard, Burns, spent many of his leisure hours, and many relics of him are to be seen at this hotel, which was, and is still, called Burns' Houff. Two newspapers are issued weekly, viz.:—the Dumfries and Galloway Courier and Herald, and the Dumfries and Galloway Standard and Advertiser, both of which are excellent papers, and have a very large circulation.

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nineteen councillors. The craftsmen were formerly divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convenor, and another to be general box-master, all of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades; these distinctions, however (for distinctions of considerable importance they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the Reform Bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lochmaben, Sanquhar and Kirkcudbright, in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Robt. T. Reid, Esq., Q.C. The numerous nursery grounds around the town are both useful and ornamental to the suburbs. The great desideratum of a copious supply of pure water has been attained, and the inhabitants have an abundance brought from ample sources, about five miles from the town.

The places of worship, including Maxwelltown, comprise three churches of the Establishment, four of the Free church, several United Presbyterian, an Episcopal, a Congregational, a Wesleyan, a Baptist, a Catholic Apostolic, and Roman Catholic Cathedral. The latter is a very large and handsome edifice, situated in Shakspere street, and has schools in connection. St. Michael's, or the mother church, claims peculiar notice on account of its cemetery, which contains numerous elegant and curious monuments. The most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns; the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt, Esq., of London, and Turnerelli modelled the sculpture. By the erection of this monument, it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st of July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the churchyard of Saint Michael. On January 25th, 1859, the centenary of the birth of the great Scotch poet, a series of banquets, entertainments, &c. was held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and in this as well as most other towns both in Scotland and England; poems were written in his honour, and at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, where a grand festival took place, a prize poem (being the best of 700 sent for approval) was recited. The last surviving son of the great poet—who had reached the mature age of 81—was interred in the same vault as his father on Feb. 28th, 1872. This churchyard has been used as a place of burial for more than seven hundred years, and contains not a few monuments that are fitted to attract attention, on account of their age as well as for other reasons. Conspicuous may be noticed the ruined monument of Provost Corsane, who had worn the badges of civic authority, as chief magistrate, bailie, and common councillor for forty-five years; also the magnificent tomb of Francis Irving, who was M.P. for the burgh in 1617. Near the gate lies the dust of Bailie Paterson, to whom the Dumfries Academy is indebted for its educational endowments. In an enclosure, surrounded by iron rails, we read: "In this cemetery, and chiefly within this enclosure, lie the mortal remains of more than 420 inhabitants of Dumfries, who were suddenly swept away by the memorable invasion of Asiatic cholera, A.D. 1832. That terrific pestilence entered the town on the 15th September, and remained till 27th November, during which time it seized at least 900 individuals, of whom 44 died in one day, and no more than 415 were reported recovered. That the benefit of this solemn warning might not be lost to posterity, this monument was erected from collections made in several churches in this town." The tombstones of William Grierson, William Welsh, and James Kirk, the three martyrs who suffered death on the Whitesands—the two former on January 2nd, 1667, and the latter June 1685—are to be seen in the churchyard. Towering high above these lowly tombstones stands a pyramid of granite, erected in 1834 to show the reverence which is cherished in modern times for these and the rest of the noble army of the Nithsdale martyrs. The mausoleum and the profusion of funeral sculpture which adorn the cemetery are so attractive that it is a pity free ingress is not at all times permitted. The fee (threepence each to the mausoleum) doubtless prevents many a stranger from inspecting these beautiful memorials to the dead. The tasteful church of St. Mary, on the north side of English street, is a graceful ornament to this approach of the town and the cemetery around it is gradually being enriched with finely-executed monumental sculpture. St. John's Episcopal church is a fine Gothic building, with tower and spire 120 feet high, built from a design by Mr. W. Slater and Mr. R. H. Carpenter, Regent street, London, the foundation stone of which was laid in August, 1867; it is in full communion with the Scottish Episcopal church.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL, AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The Infirmary was founded in 1776, at a period when very few charities of a similar nature were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the South of Scotland. Medical advice and medicine are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c., and is under the management of governors. There is also the Crichton Royal Institution, endowed by the late James Crichton, Esq., of Friar's Carse, and incorporated by Act of Parliament, dated 3rd July, 1840, as a hospital for the insane and a home for mental and nervous invalids of the higher and middle classes. The grounds, 300 acres in extent, are pleasantly situated on an elevation overlooking the valley of the Nith, and have a south-western aspect and an extensive prospect, unequalled in the South of Scotland for variety and beauty, affording scope for extended exercise and recreation. A large building within the grounds, called the second House of the Institution, is devoted chiefly to the care and treatment of the pauper inmates of the district; the number of patients accommodated being about 550. The Poor's Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor and destitute children, who are taught to read and write. It is governed by the magistrates, town council, &c., and is supported by a part of the collections from the church doors, numerous benefactions, donations, and annual subscriptions. It was founded in 1753, by the Messrs. J. & W. Muirhead, merchants. Dumfries is not behind other towns in its support of numerous religious and educational societies—both an infant and an industrial school are amongst the latter institutions. The commodious cottages or almshouses founded by the benevolence of Mrs. Carruthers, are an interesting memorial of her philanthropy. The Dumfries Academy, established under its present designation in 1802, with a complete staff of masters, superseded two institutions—the Grammar school and the Commercial school, which till then existed in separate parts of the town. The date of the foundation of these schools is unknown, but mention is made of the Grammar school in the session of clerk's records for 1688. In 1722 the masters in both schools were endowed by Bailie Paterson, of Dumfries, who bequeathed 15,000 merks to the magistrates and ministers of Dumfries for the benefit of the teachers; and in the following year by John Kaining, of Norwich, to the extent of £500. The Bell bequest of £100 was left in 1789, the interest of which is given to the English master. The present commodious and handsome structure was built mainly by private subscription. For a few years the subscribers took a share in the management of the academy, but in 1814 it was handed over to the town council, under whose liberal and enlightened patronage it flourished till August, 1872, when, by the Education Act, it was transferred as one of the higher class public schools to the management of the Dumfries Burgh School Board.

The Gentlemen's Club House, in Assembly street, was formerly the old Assembly rooms, but is now in the possession of the Dumfries and Galloway Club. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Observatory Society have erected, on Corberry Hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature in one of the most unique half-urban, half-sylvan landscapes, and commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery; the cost, which exceeded one thousand guineas, was raised in £5 shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories—the lower one for the use of the keeper, three others for the accommodation of subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globes, mathematical instruments, newspapers and periodicals; and the upper storey is set apart for a camera-obscura and prism. The grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, containing flowers and shrubs of various kinds.

The market day is Wednesday. The two principal half yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and Road fairs. Besides the usual commodities that change hands at these periods, many thousand head of cattle are bought and sold, and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, the 26th May or the Wednesday after; the third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, the third Wednesday in August, the third Wednesday in October, and the third Wednesday in November, for cattle (all old style). The parish of Dumfries embraces an area of 10,032 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 14,841, and in 1881, 16,836, the royal burgh at the last-named period numbering, 15,759. The population of the burghs of Dumfries and Maxwelltown combined at the same time contained 20,326, and the combined parishes of Dumfries and Troqueer (which include the burgh of Maxwelltown), 22,359.

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, in the parish of Troqueer, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kircudbright, and connected with Dumfries by three bridges across the Nith. In no instance has the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the Crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village notorious for disorderly conduct, it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, and councillors. Among the trading establishments are two saw mills, two tweed factories, the large dyeworks of Messrs. T. Shortridge and Son, and several good shops. The churches here are handsome and of modern erection. About a mile along the Maxwelltown bank of the Nith, are situated the ruins of Lincluden Abbey. This ecclesiastical structure was built about the middle of the twelfth century, by Uchtred, Lord of Galloway, as a convent for Benedictine nuns. In this capacity it continued till about the close of the fourteenth century, when it was suppressed by Archibald the Grim, Earl of Douglas, on account, it is alleged, of the irregularities of the inmates, and converted by him into a collegiate church for the numerous dependents of his family while they remained lords of Galloway. It existed as a college for behoof of a provost and twelve bedesmen till the Reformation, when Mr. Robert Douglas, an illegetimate son of Sir Robert Douglas, of Drumlanrig, who was provost of Lincluden when that great change occurred, continued to enjoy the benefice for forty years afterwards. Eventually the lands attached were converted into a temporal lordship and bestowed upon the family of Nithsdale. Afterwards the college became the property of the Nithsdale family, and here Lord Maxwell, in defiance of a Government edict, caused mass to be celebrated soon after the Reformation, on the 24th December, 1585, and, as it has been said, "the choral swell with which the venerable walls rung on that occasion was as the dying requiem of the ancient faith," mass never having been since said or sung in the house of Uchtred. In later days it was a favourite resort of the poet Burns, and while musing beside its ruined walls he composed several of his pieces, the "Vision of Liberty" among the number. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 4,239, and in 1881, 4,567.

TROQUEER is a parish in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, lying on the river Nith, near its mouth, and opposite to Dumfries. It is bounded by Terregles on the north, Lochrutton on the west, and New Abbey on the south, extending about seven miles and a half in length, and four and a half broad. The parish has an area of 11,675 statute acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 5,402, and in 1881, 5,524. TERREGLES is also a parish situated near to Dumfries, but in the county of Kirkcudbright. Population in 1881, 147.

DUNSCORE,

AULDGIRTH, HOLYWOOD, IRONGRAY, AND KIRKMAHOE.

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keirri on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south; it is 12 miles in length, and its breadth varies from one to four miles, and contains about 14,815 acres. The hills which surround it are healthy and good for pasture. The celebrated John Welsh, son-in-law to John Knox, was a native of Dunscore. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and cattle are reared off these lands for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes and turnips are produced in great quantities. The parish church is about nine miles N.W. from Dumfries, and seven S.E. from Moniaive; there are also in the parish a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. Robert Burns at one time held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Ellisland, and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogising the Clouden river, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddel, Esq. About four miles N.E. from Dunscore is AULDGIRTH, a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and the postal centre for the district. Population in 1881, 1,405.

HOLYWOOD is a village, in the parish of its name, and a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, about three and a half miles N. from Dumfries. The parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for 10 miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from two to three miles; its acreage is about 8,805. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rites. The temple of these pagans was succeeded by the cell of a hermit, which was subsequently changed into a house for monks of the Premonstratenses, in the beginning of the twelfth century, and the ruins of an old abbey in the churchyard are supposed to be the remains of that building. An Irish recluse, named Congal, seems to have been the founder, and he bequeathed both to the cell and the abbey the name of Dercongal, signifying "the Oakwood of Congal." The church, a neat erection and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country, about three miles from Dumfries. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,496.

IRONGRAY, one of the most picturesque parishes in the south of Scotland, is situated in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright (the village of SHAWHEAD being about seven miles N.W. of Dumfries), and is bounded on the north by the river Cairn or Clouden, where it separates it from the parish of Holywood, in Dumfries-shire, on the east by Terregles, on the west by Kirkpatrick-Durham and Urr, and on the south by Lochrutton; its surface is diversified and irregular, and its outline nearly triangular, its area comprising 13,675 acres. In the churchyard is a monument erected by Sir Walter Scott, to the memory of Helen Walker, the prototype of Jeanie Deans, the heroine in the "Heart of Midlothian," who was a native of this parish, and whose remains are interred here. The monument is of Craigleth sandstone, and is in the form of a sarcophagus. In 1881, the parish contained a population of 784.

KIRKMAHOE is a parish, in the district of Nithsdale, bounded by Closeburn, Kirkmichael, Tinwald, Dumfries, Holywood, Dunscore and Keir; situate about four miles N. from Dumfries. From some of the summits of its uplands a beautiful view is obtained of the pretty valley of the Nith, fringed in the distance by the Solway tide, and in the far back ground by Criffel and the Cumberland mountains. The church is a handsome Gothic edifice. The lands of the parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations. In this parish are the hamlets of KIRKTON, DUNCOW, and DALSWINTON. Acreage about 12,553; population in 1881, 1,250.

ECCLEFECHAN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EAGLESFIELD, KIRTLEBRIDGE, AND WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE, NEWTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village, in the parish of HODDAM, 71 miles S. of Edinburgh, 75 S.E. of Glasgow, 20 N.W. by rail from Carlisle, 16 E. of Dumfries, six N. of Annan, and 14 from Langholm, lying in a fine situation near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, within a mile of the station on the Caledonian railway. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, who have constantly a demand for the labours of the loom, and which enables the operatives to enjoy many comforts which they would otherwise be deprived of. Ecclefechan contains a few respectable shops, in which a variety of trades is carried on. Fairs are held for cattle, &c. on the Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the Tuesday after the 20th October; the Duke of Buccleuch, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings and for all cattle exposed for sale. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established in the town. There is a parochial school here, and the places of worship are the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches. Ecclefechan can boast of being the birthplace of Thomas Carlyle, renowned for his quaint but powerful writings. The remains of the great philosopher were brought from London (where he died in the early part of 1881), and interred in the parish churchyard here. Within a short distance of the village are the remains of a Roman camp, said to be one of the most complete in Scotland. About two and a half miles from Ecclefechan is the estate of Sprinkell, the property of Sir John Maxwell, but at present the residence of the Right Hon. the Earl of Antrim. The parish of Hoddam contains about 7,514 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,548 inhabitants, that of Ecclefechan at the same period being 768.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish lying on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan; it is about seven miles in length by four in breadth; acreage about 17,545. It abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its lime quarries, but much of the land is of rather poor quality. The village, a small one, is about two miles from Ecclefechan, and about 12 from Langholm. There is an Established church and a parochial school.

KIRTLEBRIDGE and EAGLESFIELD are small villages in the above parish, the former three miles, and the latter two and a half miles from Ecclefechan. At Kirtlebridge has recently been built, with all modern conveniences, a first-class family and commercial hotel, and in the immediate vicinity are the famous salmon and trout fishings of the Annan, the Esk, and the Kirtle. There is also a brick and tile works here. Kirtlebridge is a station on the Caledonian Railway.

WATERBECK is a village also in the parish of Middlebie, about three miles from Kirtlebridge station on the Caledonian railway, and four miles from Ecclefechan on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been much improved by the late Mr. Robert Carlyle and his sons. It is notable for the large supply of wool, cured bacon, and cheese, which it sends annually to the different markets. Here the United Presbyterians have a place of worship, built in the Gothic style of architecture, and there is a parochial school in the village. The population of Middlebie parish in 1881 was 1,927.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, HALF-MORTON, WESTERKIRK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANGHOLM is a thriving manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 73 miles from Edinburgh, 80 S.W. from Glasgow, 30 E. by N. from Dumfries, the like distance S.E. from Moffat, 21 N. from Carlisle, 18 N.N.E. from Annan, and 12 N. from Longtown, in Cumberland, delightfully situated on both sides of the Esk, over which there is a suspension bridge, and also a stone bridge of three arches, from which may be seen the confluence of the Ewes and the Wauchope with the Esk. This parish and the adjoining ones of Canonbie, Ewes, Westerkirk, and Eskdalemuir are known as the "five kirks of Eskdale." The town of Langholm owes its origin to the border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all-powerful Armstrongs, but is now in a state of ruin. At one time no fewer than twelve such towers existed, and among them Wauchope Castle, the earliest seat of the Lindsay family, was in the immediate neighbourhood. The tower of Gilnockie still stands about four miles below Langholm, on the right bank of the Esk. It was some little time ago renovated by the late Duke of Buccleuch, and is now open for the inspection of visitors. The author of the "Picture of Scotland" says:—"Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name was associated with many of its localities." It was on the Branxholm Holm that, when going to meet King James V., he and his "gallant companie" of thirty-six men ran their horses and "brak their spears." Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick; the story of the judicial execution of this border chief and his companions, by James V., is well known. The graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted churchyard at Carlenrig. This district is also associated with the Covenanters, especially with the memory of Alexander Peden, one of the most famous of the Scottish worthies; a "knowe," or small hill, commanding a delightful view of the valley, is still named "Peden's View," and at its foot rises "Peden's Well," where, in answer to his prayer, a mist is said to have "shrouded him from the dragoons who were seeking his life." Langholm is the birthplace of Julius Meikle, translator of "Camoe Lucied," and author of the song "There's nae luck about the house."

Burnfoot, the residence of W. E. Malcolm, Esq. is situated on the banks of the Esk, three miles from Langholm, and was the birthplace of the "four knights of Eskdale," Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm, General Sir John Malcolm, Sir James Malcolm, and Sir Charles Malcolm, who in various ways distinguished themselves in different parts of the world. In the neighbourhood of Langholm is a copious mineral well, called Bloch Well, which is efficacious in the cure of cutaneous diseases. It is less known than it should be, owing to the limited accommodation which exists in its immediate neighbourhood. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the "riding times," or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. The making of plaids and blankets for the neighbouring shepherds has developed into the manufacture of tweeds and other fabrics, which find their way into all parts of the kingdom, and large quantities are exported; they bear a character second to none in the woollen market. Instead of the one small mill which employed a few hands not many years ago, not less than five factories now give employment to the inhabitants. Now that there is railway communication, supplied by the North British Railway Company, affording an outlet to all parts of the country, there is little doubt that Langholm, with its inexhaustible water power, will become one of the most important manufacturing towns in the south of Scotland. Ruskin, in his book on modern painters, remarks: "There are perhaps no scenes in our own island more interesting than the wooded dingles which traverse them, the red rocks glowing out on either side and shelving down into the pools of their deep brown rivers, as at Langholm and Jedburgh; the steep oak copses climbing the banks, the paler plumes of birch shaking themselves free into the light of the sky above, and the fen arches of the monastery, where the fields in the glen are the greenest, or the stones of the border tower where its cliffs are steepest, rendering both field and cliff a thousandfold more dear to the heart and sight." In the market place stands the Town Hall, ornamented with a neat spire. Besides the woollen mills already alluded to, the town contains a number of respectable shops, a branch each of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company, two distilleries, a brewery, dyehouse, tannery, and some excellent hotels. There is likewise an elegant and commodious temperance hotel, in which is included the army and drill room of the Eskdale Rifle Volunteers (7th Dumfries-shire). A newspaper is published in the town—the Eskdale and Liddesdale Advertiser. The government of the town is vested in a baron bailie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is superior, and a board of Commissioners, elected by the inhabitants. Sheriff's small debt courts and justice of peace courts are held at stated periods.

The parish church, a modern structure, is allowed to be one of the most elegant and substantial in the south of Scotland; the other places of worship are a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and one for the Morrisonian body, and a very handsome Mission Hall, erected a few years ago, which is one of the finest of its kind in Scotland. There is a very extensive and richly endowed library, which derives considerable advantage from a munificent bequest of the late Thomas Telford, Esq. the celebrated engineer, who was a native of the district. A very neat and substantial stone building has been erected for the use of the library, at a cost of about £2,600; £1,000 of this sum being a bequest of the late Alex. Reid, Esq., the remainder having been raised by subscriptions. The inhabitants have brought into the town at a considerable expense the copious spring known as "White Well," whereby every family in the place is now amply supplied with the purest water. A monument to Sir John Malcolm stands on the hill behind the town, erected at a cost of £1,300, and there is another near the Post Office in memory of his brother, Sir Pulteney Malcolm. The market day is Wednesday; fairs are held on the 16th April (for seeds), the last Tuesday in May (old style), 26th July (for lambs and wool), 18th September (for sheep), and 5th November (for cattle); there are also two hiring days—one in May and the other in November. There has been established a fortnightly sale of cattle, sheep, &c., and the Eskdale and Liddesdale Agricultural Society hold their show of stock generally in October, at which premiums are awarded. The parish of Langholm embraces an area of 16,971 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 4,612; of this number the town had 4,280.

CANONBIE (or Canonby), a parish halfway between Longtown and Langholm, and on the southern border of the county, is separated on the south-east from England by the river Liddal, whose romantic banks present some pleasing scenery, and on the south-west by the "Scotch Dyke." The river Esk intersects the parish, dividing it into two equal parts. The parish, in which are mines of coal and quarries of lime of excellent quality, and through which runs the high road from Edinburgh to London, is about 9 miles long and 6 broad. The kirk is a very large stone building, and will accommodate 1,400 persons. There is also a handsome Free church. The scenery along the Esk is considered to be the finest in the south of Scotland. The Duke of Buccleuch is sole proprietor of the parish. There are two stations—Canonbie and Gilnockie—on the Langholm branch of the North British Railway. The hamlets of HOLLOWS BOWHOLM, CLAYGATE, GLENZIER, FORGEBRAEHEAD, EVERTON, ROWANBURN, and WOODHOUSE, are in this parish, which embraces an area of 24,142 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,723.

ESKDALEMUIR is a large and mountainous pastoral parish of 43,282 acres, on the north-eastern border of the county, and in the district of Eskdale. The manse, which is about the centre of the parish, is 14 miles from Langholm. The river Esk has its rise in this parish. A very small portion of Eskdalemuir is under cultivation; the principal land proprietor is the Duke of Buccleuch. Population in 1881, 543.

WESTERKIRK parish, containing about 26,992 acres, is also situated near the north-eastern boundary of the county, about 6 miles N.W. from Langholm. Nearly the whole of this portion of the district is devoted to pasturage for sheep and black cattle. The church stands on the left bank of the river Esk. The Duke of Buccleuch, Sir Frederick J. W. Johnstone, and Colonel Malcolm are the principal landowners. Population in 1881, 478.

The parish of EWES, situated at the eastern extremity of the county, is remarkable for its beautiful ranges of green hills, covered with verdure to their summits, and the clearness of the river, which affords excellent trouting. Numerous plantations on the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch add additional beauty to the appearance of the sweet dale of Ewes. Arkleton, the property of William Scott Elliott, Esq., is one of the finest residences in the south of Scotland. The acreage of the parish is 24,941, and in 1881 it had a population of 337.

HALF-MORTON is a parish in the district of Eskdale, lying between Canonbie and Kirkpatrick-Fleming. The places of worship are Established and Free churches and an United Presbyterian church; there is also a Board school in the parish, which has an area of 6,084 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 497. The village of CHAPEL KNOWE is about 10 miles S.W. of Langholm.

LOCHMABEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KIRKMICHAEL, TINWALD AND TORTHORWALD, AND THE VILLAGES OF AMISFIELD, COLLIN, ROUCAN, SMALLHOLM, GREENHILL, HECK, HIGHTAE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the parish of the name, 65 miles S. from Edinburgh, 70 S.E. from Glasgow, 33 S.E. from Sanquhar, 30 N.W. from Carlisle, 31 S.E. from Thornhill, the same distance W. from Langholm, 15 S. from Moffat, 13 N.W. from Annan, 10 W.N.W. from Ecclefechan, 8½ N. by E. from Dumfries, and 4 W. from Lockerbie. It is situated in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. Few towns are situated in a district of so rich and varied beauty, and few are associated with so many historical events. It traces its origin to a very early age, and derives its name from its situation being among a number of beautiful lakes, or lochs; the loch on which it is so delightfully placed (Lochmaben) signifying in Scoto-Irish "the lake on the white plain." The Castle Loch, which flows very near the south side of the town, is about three miles in circumference; the Mill Loch is somewhat of less dimensions, and lies on the north side of the town; this loch flows at times even up to the doors of the houses. In these two lochs there is a fish called the vendace, or vendise, which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with anywhere else in Britain. It is delicately formed, about six inches long, and resembles a young herring. How it came here is not exactly known; some suppose it to have been brought from La Vendee, in France, when Bruce's castle was a royal residence, and hence the name vendace. There is an annual vendace club, composed of gentlemen of the county, who meet once a year, about the end of July, to have a day's fishing and recreation on the Castle Loch. There is also another vendace club, who fish in the Mill Loch. These two lochs, as well as four others of considerable extent, are much resorted to by boating and fishing parties, and form a very agreeable recreation both to the inhabitants and also to tourists and visitors. The Dumfries, Lochmaben and Lockerbie branch of the Caledonian line has a station here, and also others at AMISFIELD and SHIELDHILL.

The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength, which was built by Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Bruces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake which is called Castle Loch, and was surrounded by a deep moat, the outline of which is still to be seen. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the same loch; this edifice with its outworks covered about 16 acres. After different grants to various relations of the Bruces, it was annexed by Parliament, in 1487, to the Crown, and is now the property or in the keeping of Captain Hope Johnstone, of Raehills. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted by James VI., and states that it is a renewal of charters granted by his illustrious predecessors; its date is 16th of July, 1612. From this charter it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c., totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequence. The municipal government is vested in a provost, one bailie, a dean of guild, a treasurer and five councillors. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Annan and Sanquhar in returning one member to Parliament. The Town Hall, with its tower and clock, stands in the middle of the principal street, opposite to which there is a very handsome statue of Robert Bruce. A subscription library affords information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported. There are a Freemasons' lodge, two curling clubs, bowling green, and other associations. There is a branch establishment here of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also a Savings Bank for the town and neighbourhood. Lochmaben is not a place of much trade; with the exception of weaving stockings, shirts, &c., which is carried on to a considerable extent, there are no manufactories. It is a rural town, and a place of resort for tourists and strangers, who in the summer months visit it as a place of retirement and recreation.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells. The foundation stone was laid April 10th, 1818, and was opened for divine worship in July, 1820. The edifice, which cost about £3,000, is capable of accommodating about 1,400 persons. The Free church, built in 1844, is a plain and neat structure, capable of accommodating 700 persons; the cost of its erection was about £800. There is a chapel for the United Presbyterians, and a Free church at HIGHTAE, about three miles from Lochmaben. Fairs for the sale of pork are held on the second and fourth Mondays in January, on the first and third Mondays in February and March, on the last Monday in November, and on the second and last Mondays in December; and for seeds on the third Monday in March.

Within the parish of Lochmaben there are also four villages known as the "Four towns," viz.: SMALLHOLM, GREENHILL, HECK, and HIGHTAE. They are remarkable in Scotland as holding their lands by a peculiar tenure. The proprietors of lands in these baronies are called kingly tenants, and by successive warrants and protections of the King in 1592, 1602, and 1664, declared to have right to continue their possessions undisturbed and at the old rent, so long as they shall continue to pay the same. These baronies are said to have been conferred on the retainers of the Bruce, and many of the present holders can trace their ancestry for hundreds of years back. Son succeeds father, and the title is completed by the entry of the name in Lord Mansfield's rental book, and the usual solemnities of service and infeftment, otherwise common to the law of Scotland, are here unknown. The parish comprises 10,813 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,816, of which number the town of Lochmaben contained 1,216.

KIRKMICHAEL, united with Garren, in the district of Nithsdale, is about ten miles long and four broad, and contains about 16,983 acres. The parish of Kirkpatrick-juxta bounds it on the north-west, Johnstone on the north-east, Lochmaben on the south-east, Tinwald and Kirkmanse on the south, and Closeburn on the west. Many remains of ancient fortifications and Roman roads are visible in this district. A number of ancient coins and other small antiquities have been found. More than half of the parish belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, and the rest is distributed among several proprietors. The Ae river bounds the parish on the west, which, in 1881, had a population of 849.

The small village of TINWALD, which is situated about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birthplace of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish of a triangular figure, each side of which is about four and a half miles in length, and contains 10,283 acres; the northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. The greater part of the parish is arable. Within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Amisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris. Population in 1881, 861.

The parish of TORTHORWALD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Mousewald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish by the Lochar water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south, with an acreage of 6,881. The village, which is situated in the north of the parish, is about four miles from Lochmaben, and the same distance from Dumfries. In the vicinity are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwald, supposed to have existed since the 13th century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is the pleasing village of COLLIN, which contains the elevated residence of the late Mrs. Janet Coulthart, from whence extensive views are obtained of the surrounding country; and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish, which in 1881 had a population of 986.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, SAINT MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH, HUTTON AND CORRIE, AND APPLEGARTH.

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town, in the parish of Dryfesdale, 67 miles S. of Edinburgh, 12 E. of Dumfries, 11 N.W. of Annan, 6 N.W. of Ecclefechan, and 4 E. of Lochmaben; situated on the great mail road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles S.E. of the former, and 26½ N.W. of the latter, on the Caledonian Railway, for which line there is a station. It is also the junction for Lochmaben and Dumfries. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably for a long period its character was only that of a small hamlet, attached to and protected by the residence or a stronghold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufacturers have not yet made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. It is proposed to build a town hall, with a clock tower, and a committee has been formed, who have bought a suitable site at a cost of £1,500. It will contain committee rooms and a lesser hall, in the Scotch baronial style, and the building is estimated to cost about £4,000, which has been raised by private subscriptions, and a bazaar. In the basement is to be a large market hall for the accommodation of farmers and others attending the Lockerbie markets. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and another of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are established here; a Bank for Savings, opened in 1824, has been eminently successful. There are several good inns. A newspaper called the Annandale Herald and Moffat News is published here every Thursday, and in Moffat every Friday. The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. The Free church is a handsome ornament to Bridge street, and the chapel belonging to the United Presbyterian congregation is a convenient building. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, and a Masonic lodge. The town is well lighted with gas. A few years ago a considerable sum of money was left by Mr. George Easton, of Chester, towards the erection of a Mechanics' Hall. The building, a stone one, is a neat erection in High street. Large and commodious schools were erected in 1875, by the School Board, at a cost of nearly £5,000. The market is held on Thursday; from the last week of November till the end of April it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there are sometimes sold in a single day, from £1,000 to £2,000 worth. There is also a market for hiring servants on the third Thursday in October (old style). Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August (all old style). The last fair, which is for lambs, is the largest and last lamb fair in Scotland—the number of lambs on the ground being, in some years, from 30,000 to 40,000. The remaining fairs are a new one, established for the sale of cattle, in September, the second Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas (all old style.) These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended: the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Borough hill. The day following the lamb fair in August, races occasionally take place. The population of Lockerbie in 1881 was 2,030.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale, and includes the town of Lockerbie. The extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles, the average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, and of the lower half about one and a half; about two thirds of the parish is lowland and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of the 10,281 acres in this parish, about 80,000 are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Quhytewoollen Hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,971.

HUTTON AND CORRIE is a united parish in the district of Annandale, and situated about six miles N.E. of Lockerbie. It extends twelve miles in length from north to south, by a general breadth of about three, and is bounded on the east by Eskdalemuir, by Wamphray and Applegarth on the west, and Tundergarth on the south There are two Board schools and an Estab ished church in the parish, which has an area of 23,923 statute acres, and in 1881 it contained a population of 814.

SAINT MUNGO parish is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes; it is distant about three miles from the village of Ecclefechan, and three from the town of Lockerbie. Castlemilk is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley. This was originally the seat of the ancient lords of Annandale. Much later it belonged to the Maxwells and the Douglasses. It was some time ago purchased from George Armstrong, Esq. by a member of the Jardine family. In the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the Duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired on that occasion were found in 1771, when planting a spot, afterwards called "The Cannon Holes." The present proprietor, Sir Robert Jardine, M.P. has erected a new mansion near to the one above mentioned. The Established church is a splendid stone edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, erected at a cost of £5,000; it was opened on the 7th of January, 1876, being the gift of Sir Robert Jardine, M.P. of Castlemilk. There is also a parochial school in the parish, which contains about 4,897 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 653.

TUNDERGARTH, a parish of 10,482 acres, in which a great number of sheep are pastured, is separated from that of Saint Mungo on the west, and is nearly thirteen miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles in its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill called Burnswark overlooks the district from the south. There is an Established church and a parochial school in the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 466.

APPLEGARTH (or Applegirth), is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben. In length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward the same. It is bounded by Wamphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village, or hamlet rather, lies on the banks of the Annan, three miles from Lockerbie, and about eleven miles from Dumfries. There are a steam saw mill, two railway stations, an Established church, and two parochial schools in the parish. Applegarth and Sibbaldbie which comprise an area of 11,869 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 969.

SIBBALDBIE, a small village in the parish of Applegarth, is three miles from Lockerbie, and contains a woollen mill, also a parochial school; and Balgray, the residence of James Jardine Patterson, Esq. is near the village.

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA, AND WAMPHRAY, AND THE HAMLETS OF CRAIGIELANDS AND HOPPERTOOTIE.

MOFFAT is a large parish of 42,972 acres, in the interesting district of Annandale. The town which has been styled the "Baden of Scotland," is small, airy, cleanly and very respectable, 51 miles S. of Edinburgh, 57 S.E. of Glasgow, 14½ N. of Lockerbie, 41 N.W. of Carlisle, and 21 N. of Dumfries; situated about one mile and a half from Beattock station, on the Caledonian Railway, from which, in 1882, a short line of railway was made, connecting Moffat with the Caledonian main line from Edinburgh and Glasgow to Carlisle and the South. During the season omnibuses also ply from the Annandale and Buccleuch Arms Hotels to St. Mary's Loch on the Selkirk road, passing Frenchland Tower, the lands of Dumcrieff (Lord Rollo), Craigieburn, celebrated in song by Burns, Hogg, &c. (the property of J. Proudfoot, Esq., but now the summer residence of Captain Hopegood), Capplegill (Mrs. Johnstone), Bodsbeck Hill, the scene of Hogg's tale of "The Brownie," the "Grey Mare's Tail," sung of in Scott's "Marmion," Loch Skene, a wild and solitary tarn, and are met at St. Mary's Cottage (Tibbie Shiel's) by conveyances from Peebles and Selkirk, whence there are railways. The town stands 378 feet above the level of the sea, and upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of and embraced by a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries-shire, with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north, and east. The huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes; some covered with wood, others beautifully chequered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash affording shelter and enclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly (though chiefly) pasture. The progress in these pursuits has been of late very remarkable, as shown in the rise in the price of land, and the reputation of the farm stock of the breeders in the neighbourhood.

The principal street of the town (High street) is wide and spacious, laid down upon the principal recommended by the late J. L. M'Adam, and is clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain. It is lined with ranges of excellent shops, well supplied with the necessaries and luxuries of life, and even the branch streets are being pressed into the service of commerce. Within the last twenty years building has progressed rapidly on the roads leading from the town proper, where there are many beautifully situated villas, cottages, &c., most of which are let furnished to visitors for the season or a longer period, as may be agreed upon. In November, 1875, an ornamental drinking fountain, consisting of a pedestal of rough sandstone surmounted by the figure of a ram cast in bronze, was erected in the centre of the town; it was the gift of the late William Colvin, Esq. of Craigielands. A short distance from the town is a hydropathic establishment, the building, which is of great extent, is of red sandstone, and has a grand and imposing appearance. It was commenced in June, 1875, and contains nearly two hundred apartments, including dining, billiard, smoking and numerous sitting rooms, &c. It has accommodation for over 300 visitors, and is one of the handsomest and best conducted establishments of its kind in Scotland. The town commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows and cornfields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which has its source in an extraordinarily strange and wild ravine in this district, named the "Devil's Beef Tub," and runs at a distance of about two hundred yards along the south-west of the town, then glides away to meet its neighbouring streams, the Evan and the Moffat which unite about five miles below. The surrounding plantations, every year increasing in extent and beauty, and the cultered strath, the tree-garnished hill, the legended turret, ancient Roman camps and roads, beautiful walks, and the copse and thicket free to the feet of the visitor, supply the eye with pleasure and the frame with health. About four miles north-west from hence there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road maker, John Loudon M'Adam, died in this town, on the 26th November, 1836, in his 81st year; he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to the locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life. Upon one of his sons was conferred the honour of Knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age and growing infirmities. Mr. M'Adam received from Government £10,000, in two separate instalments. To his credit it is recorded that during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer. On the 18th September, 1860, the eminent civil engineer, Joseph Locke, M.P. (born at Attercliffe, 1806), assistant and pupil of George Stephenson, died in Moffat whilst enjoying the sports of the shooting season. There are three principal inns, admirably conducted by their respective proprietors, namely, the Annandale Arms, the Buccleuch Arms, and the Star, while a fourth, the Beattock Bridge Hotel, lies south of the town and near the railway. The Star is an elegant inn, erected a few years ago; the Buccleuch Arms (formerly Cranstoun's Private Hotel), has been enlarged, refitted and improved as a public inn; while the Annandale Arms is a place of old repute, and the Beattock Bridge Hotel is known to all travellers. There are likewise in the town well frequented bath rooms, to which a spacious newsroom is attached for the use of visitors; these are under excellent management. The large hall of the bath-room is used for concerts, lectures, &c., and during the summer a subscription band is added to the other attractions, which disperses "the concord of sweet sound" to the promenaders; on every Friday evening during the season there is a ball. On the same premises there is a small but neat and well kept bowling green, as well as a billiard room. The other chief buildings are Moffat House (the town residence of the superior, J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq. of Annandale), the Established, the Free and the United Presbyterian churches; the latter a handsome structure, erected at a cost of about £3,000, was opened for worship in July, 1864. The Established church, built and presented to the parishioners in 1796 by the late Earl of Hopetoun, was one of the churches of Annandale transferred to the Bishop of Glasgow, and was constituted one of the prebends of the see. The present structure, the foundation stone of which was laid in August 1885, and which was opened for public worship in September 1887, is of Gothic architecture, and is seated for 1,150 persons. The main door is surmounted by a tower rising 107 feet, while at the north, east, and north-west corners there are spirelets rising over 50 feet each. Internally the church measures 80 feet by 50 feet in the nave, and 61 feet in width at the transept. The pulpit is of a highly ornamented character, being of carved pitch pine, set on seven polished pillars of red sandstone. Some of the principal windows—notably the elegant circle above the pulpit—have already been filled in with stained glass. At the west end a hall as been placed, with vestry on the south and session house on the north sides. The hall is lighted by a double mullioned window over the reading desk and single mullioned windows at each side. The church and hall, together with an elegant and commodious manse built close by, have cost between £12,000 and £13,000, £4,000 of which has been subscribed by the congregation, and the remainder provided by the heritors of the parish. The Episcopal church is a modern iron building, erected in 1872. The Roman Catholic chapel is a wooden structure, which is only open for worship during the summer season. There are also three branch banks and a savings bank, the Academy, and Morrison's school. There is a subscription library containing upwards of 4,000 volumes, and two newspapers, the Annandale Herald and Moffat News and the Moffat Times, the former published on Friday and the latter on Saturday, while each contains a visitors' list.

Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort for invalids and pleasure seekers, and for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphurous and two chalybeate. The sulphurous spring is distinguished by the name of "Moffat Well," and is about a mile from the town; a very good carriage road leads to it, and during the summer omnibuses ply between it and the town. The "Fons Moffetensis" was described in Latin, in 1659, by Matthew Mackaile, as a spring possessing great healing virtues, sufficiently well known to excite interest. It is now nearly 300 years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, and also by visitors from England and in some instances from Ireland; of late the summer visitors have so increased as to be numbered by thousands. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of bilious complaints, also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating an appetite and promoting digestion, and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism. It sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain, whither the summer sojourners hie in the morning, on foot or by omnibus. Hartfell Spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson. It issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat, and may be carried to any distance, but it will not keep good for more than four days. It is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex. The other chalybeate is of a peculiar nature, and obtained in a very curious manner—namely, by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell called "Gartpool Linn," in the vicinity of the town. The surface of this rock is strongly impregnated with sulphate of alumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently taken in smaller portions—not more than a wineglassful at a time. The exquisite scenery of this Linn has been laid out in walks by the munificence of the late proprietor, the Hon. Butler Johnstone, and is freely open to the public. The different rivers supply abundance of amusement to the trout angler, and the celebrated alpine lake Loch Skene, whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea, contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the "Grey Mare's Tail," tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about 300 feet above the level of the vale, and which appears from the opposite side of the glen to be one unbroken fall. This is the loftiest fall in the British Islands. It pours its waters into the infant Moffat, which flows on through a grand narrow pass, until it sweep sthroug hthe domains of Dumcrieff, the property of Lord Rollo, and loses itself in the Annan.

Moffat was constituted a burgh by the adoption in 1864 of the Police Act, and now possesses a commission invested with powers for the sanitary improvement of the burgh, the holding of monthly courts, and other matters concerning health and morals. Moffat is the seat of a sheriff's small debt (local) court, and justice of peace courts are held on the first Friday of April, August and December. Moffat has been the birth-place of several notables—eg. Nicholaus de Moffet, Bishop of Glasgow (1260-1270); Robert Johnstone, LL.D. author of a "History of Scotland," &c.; Walter Boyd, banker, of Boyd, Benfield & Co.; William Dickson, a writer on slavery; William Murray, the chronometrist; and Dr. D. Welsh, moderator of the first Free Church Assembly. The late Peter Johnston, Esq. of Harthope, endowed in the parish a side school, at Evan Water, and a female industrial school, beside the Ladies Knowe. Friday was the weekly market day, but is now discontinued, although the farmers meet in great numbers on that day. There are two half-yearly hiring markets; the first is held on the third Friday in March (old style), the second on the Friday after the 19th of October. A fair for lambs is held in July, on the Friday after Langholm. There is also an annual sheep and cattle market called the Top Fair, in September, on the Friday after the Falkirk tryst, at which time a flower, sheep, cattle, &c. show—or rather a combination of shows is held, to which by its excellence great crowds are attracted. The district is noted for the breed of cheviots; there is a grand annual sale of rams of that breed held at the Beattock Hotel on the day before the tup fair. Some choice specimens of stock are always forwarded, and prices per head have repeatedly exceeded 100 guineas. The population of Moffat parish in 1881 was 2,930; of the town, 2,161.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA derives its name from its vicinity to a chapel, of which the ruins are yet visible, formerly dedicated to the famous missionary, meaning the "lands nigh to the kirk of Saint Patrick." It is situate in the upper district of Annandale, bounded on the north by Moffat, and on the east by Wamphray, and contains 22,385 acres. The celebrated Gartpool Linn is in this parish; likewise the castle of Auchencastle, the ruins of which cover a considerable extent of ground. It was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David "the Bruce," and subsequently was in the possession of Douglas of Morton; its antiquity, therefore, is unquestionable. The modern castle of Auchencastle, the residence of William Younger, Esq. is a structure of considerable extent, and splendidly situated on rising ground, near the Evan Water. The old tower of Loch-house is supposed to have been re-built by James Johnstone, of Corchead, chamberlain to Bishop Whiteford, of Brechin, whose daughter the chamberlain married, and with her obtained possession of the extensive lands belonging to the bishop in Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Moffat. Loch-house is now inhabited by a cottier or herd, who has his cot within its walls. There are other ruins of ancient edifices, viz. a chapel a little to the N.W. of Moffat, which excites some interest, and is worthy of survey. The summer residence of James Smith, Esq., Craigielands; and the elegant mansion of Marchbankwood (Miss Johnstone), near which is also Beattock House, a fine modern building, are the only modern mansions of any note in the parish. The parish church is a plain stone edifice with tower. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture, though it is being rapidly subdued to the plough. CRAIGIELANDS and HOPPERTOOTIE are hamlets in Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Population of Kirkpatrick-Juxta parish in 1881, 1,064.

JOHNSTONE parish is in the district of Annandale, adjoining Kirkpatrick-Juxta; it is six miles in length, and three in breadth, and contains 18,490 acres. The remains of Lochwood tower, situate at the northern end of the parish, in the centre of a venerable and picturesque wood, and surrounded by impassible bogs, are the only vestiges of antiquity sufficiently interesting to attract attention in the parish. Regarding the own unknown personage by whose orders it was originally erected, James VI. is recorded to have remarked that "however honest he might have been in outward appearance, he must have been a rogue at heart." Robert, natural brother to the chieftain, Lord John Maxwell, of Nithsdale, burnt it in savage glee in the sixteenth century, during the clannish quarrel, which resulted in the battle of the Dryffe Lands: John James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale, is proprietor, and occupies an elegant mansion called Raehills, the only notable residence in the parish. There is nothing peculiar to be observed respecting this local portion of the district, further than that (on the authority of a late reverend minister) "in this populous rural parish there is neither public-house, nor meeting house, nor village, nor prison, nor lawyer, nor beggar," all of which is true still. It has four well conducted schools, and the educational, moral, and religious interests of the parish are carefully and efficiently attended to. The parish churchyard contains the family vault of the House of Annandale. The heritors of this parish erected, in 1862, a parochial school, with house for the master, and library attached, at a cost of £550; the library contains over one thousand volumes. Population of Johnstone parish in 1881, 1,002.

The parish of WAMPHREY receives its name from its situation emphatically expressed by the Gaelic word Uamh-fri, signifying "the den in the forest." Agreeably to this etymology, the church stands in a deep woody recess, by the side of Wamphray water, which brawls and thunders its way through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks, clad with thriving plantations, or by the lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and sportively adorned by saplings of ash rising from their interstices. This parish adjoins Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Johnstone; it is of an oblong figure, six miles and a half in length, by three in breadth, with an acreage of 13,133. There are but four resident proprietors. The Caledonian Railway runs through the parish, and has a station here. Population in 1881, 455.

SANQUHAR,

CRAWICK, KIRKCONNEL, MENNOCK BRIDGE, WANLOCKHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SANQUHAR is a large parish of 40,846 acres, in the district of Nithsdale. The town, an ancient one, erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh by charter from James VI. in 1596, is 56 miles S.S.W. of Edinburgh, the same distance S. by E. of Glasgow, 32 E.S.E. of Ayr, and 26 N.W. of Dumfries; situated on the left bank of the Nith, and on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, for which line there is a station. Sanquhar, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen at a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It was a few years ago excavated with great care by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, and many interesting objects were found, including several human skeletons and a well of great depth with a bucket suspended in it. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Crichton, ancestors of the Marquis of Bute, who holds the title of Lord Sanquhar. The castle, as well as the greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile from it stands the house of Eliock, the residence of the family of Veitch, who gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim to the honour of being the birthplace of the "Admirable Crichton." The town consists chiefly of one main street. The Town Hall stands at the end of High street, and has a tower with a clock. In 1882 a handsome public hall was erected, at a cost of £1,500. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts. The coalfield extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleuch is the chief proprietor. There are two manufactories for spades and shovels, one at Crawick and one near the railway station, and there are also two brick and tile works in the town. The British Linen Company and the Royal Bank of Scotland have branches here, and there is also a District Savings Bank. The town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and four councillors; and, in conjunction with Dumfries, Annan, Kirkcudbright, and Lochmaben, sends one member to Parliament, the present representative being Robert T. Reid, Esq.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, a Baptist chapel, and one for the Evangelican Union or Morrisonian body. The parish church, which was erected in 1823, on the site of an older one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground. The executors of the late James Crichton, of Friar's Carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, appropriated £2,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar. In 1885, by an order of the Educational Endowment Commissioners, this school was discontinued, and the net proceeds of the endowment applied, through the School Board, to the purposes of higher education. Fairs are held on the first Friday after the 12th of February and November (old style); and there is one for lambs, sheep and wool, on the 17th July, or the first Friday after. CRAWICK and MENNOCK BRIDGE are in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 3,038; and of the town, 1,353.

KIRKCONNEL village is 4 miles N.W. from Sanquhar, and 8 E. from New Cumnock, situate on the high road between Dumfries and Glasgow. It contains the parish church and parochial school. The parish, which is bounded by that of Sanquhar on the south and east, is 15 miles in length and 8 in breadth, and contains about 26,000 acres. In it are two mineral springs, one possessing medicinal properties similar in effect to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat; the other similar to the Kirkland spa in Galloway. There is a good hotel in the village. The inhabitants are employed in agriculture and in the adjoining coal works. The Duke of Buccleuch is proprietor of nearly the whole of this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,019, of which the village contained 464.

WANLOCKHEAD village is situated at the eastern extremity of the parish of Sanquhar, and near the foot of the Lowther hills, about 8 miles N.E. from the burgh. It is said to be more elevated above the sea level than any other village or town in Scotland. The houses are scattered on the hillside, without regard to regularity. The extensive and valuable lead mines belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch furnish employment to a considerable number of miners, artisans and others. The mines are reputed to have been discovered during the minority of James VI., by some Germans who were searching for gold. It is said that "Humphrey Clinker" was written by Smollet while on a visit to this village. There is a quoad sacra Established church and a Free church here. Population in 1881, 837.

THORNHILL,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CARRON BRIDGE, CLOSEBURN, DUNREGGAN, DURISDEER, GATELAW BRIDGE, GLENCAIRN, KEIR, MONIAIVE, MORTON, PENPONT, AND TYNRON.

THORNHILL is a very respectable and considerable village in the parish of Morton, 66 miles S. by E. of Glasgow, 38 N.W. of Carlisle, 40 N.E. of Newton Stewart, 44 S.E. of Kilmarnock, 30 N.W. of Annan, the same distance S.E. of Cummock, 22 N.E. of New Galloway, 14 N.W. of Dumfries, 12 S.E. of Sanquhar, and 7½ N.E. of Moniaive. It is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and is charmingly situated towards the centre of the extensive amphitheatre of hills which include Middle Nithsdale, with the river Nith winding through the valley. About four miles from Thornhill is Drumlanrig Castle, the noble mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry; it is beautifully situated on rising ground on the right bank of the river, overlooking the whole district. Within the last half century the woods around the castle have been greatly extended, and now cover a large portion of country. The gardens and pleasure grounds of the castle are very beautiful; they are kept with great care, and are free to the inspection of visitors on Tuesday and Friday. The castle was re-built by William, first Duke of Queensberry, between the years 1679 and 1689, and it is said the expense incurred in building was so great that the Duke, not wishing that any one should inspect the accounts connected with it, wrote upon them "the deil pyke out his een wha looks herein." It is also related that the Duke only slept one night in the castle that had cost him so much in erecting. Some of the remains of a very ancient building, which was called the House of the Hassock, and on the site of which the present castle was built, may still be traced. In the year 1776, when Mr. Pennant visited Drumlanrig, there was a breed of wild cattle in the woods, which are described as being of a milk-white colour, with black ears and finely curved horns. It is said they were removed to Chillingham Castle in Northumberland, where the breed still exists, as well as at Hamilton. Within a mile of Drumlanrig Castle are the ruins of a very ancient castle, which a few years ago were excavated with great care, by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch; this is Tibber's Castle, which appears to have been destroyed in the time of Bruce, and is referred to in Blind Harry's metrical history of Sir William Wallace. About three miles from Thornhill are the very fine ruins of Morton Castle. It is very ancient, having been under the care of Sir Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray, during the minority of David Bruce. The ruins and the surrounding scenery are very picturesque, and have formed a study for several distinguished painters, viz., Thomson of Duddingston, and Horatio M'Culloch. The remains of Roman encampments and, in the high grounds, of ancient British encampments, are very numerous over the whole district, and at one time there were many cairns of stones. About three miles from Thornhill, in the parish of Closeburn, there is a very remarkable ravine, worn out of the soft sandstone by a small rivulet. This is Crichope Linn, classical from the writings of Sir Walter Scott, in which it is described as being the hiding place of Balfour of Burleigh. This place, as well as almost every glen in the district, has associations connected with the times of the persecuted covenanters. The whole of the district may also be said to form part of "the land o' Burns." Over it he travelled while engaged in the duties of the excise, and many of his finest poems are connected with it. The village of Thornhill is in a very salubrious situation, the streets are wide, and the houses are neatly disposed. The land belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. In Thornhill is a society of young men, having for their object the diffusion of knowledge among the people by means of public lectures. There is also a public library containing about 800 volumes, several benevolent societies, a musical club, a bowling green, a lawn tennis court, &c.; there is also a museum of natural history and antiquities. The building, which was erected in 1869, is surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds, in which there is an extensive collection of plants, shrubs and trees. In the grounds of the museum is a very good statue of Richard Cameron, the noted Covenanter, who fell fighting at Airdmoss, Ayrshire, when his head was cut off and conveyed to Edinburgh, and there placed on the Nether bow. The statue is the work of the late Mr. Currie, sculptor, Dumfries. A society named the Society of Enquiry, having for its object original research and observation in science, has monthly meetings in the museum. The Nithsdale Agricultural Society's show is held on the third Tuesday of September, annually. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature; there is, however, a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable hotels in the south of Scotland; they are the Buccleuch and Queensberry and the George. The parish church, which was erected in 1781, was situated about a mile and a half from Morton Castle, but as the population had congregated at Thornhill in later years, it was taken down and a handsome one built in 1840-1, near the village, by the Duke of Buccleuch, at a cost of £3,550, affording accommodation for 1,200 persons. There are places of worship for the United Presbyterian and Morrisonian bodies. At GATELAW BRIDGE, about two miles from Thornhill, is the Union Poorhouse, which serves for the ten adjoining parishes. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in February (old style), and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers. The population of Thornhill in 1881 was 1,289.

The parish of MORTON extends from the left bank of the Nith, north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between 6 and 7 miles, by a breadth of about 4, its contents being 8,036 acres. It is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn; it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and Cample streams pass through the parish, the whole of which belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, exclusive of one small property. Population in 1881, 2,118.

The parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends 11 miles in length, by from 3 to 5 in breadth, containing about 30,083 acres. The western and northern divisions are mountainous and pastoral. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, to which the elegant mansion and grounds of Colonel Walker contribute greatly. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name. The church is situate at a short distance from the site of an older edifice. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,737.

MONIAIVE, a small but pleasant village in the parish of Glencairn, is 16 miles N.W. from Dumfries, and 8 S.S.W. from Thornhill. The business of Moniaive is of a domestic nature, and chiefly supported by the many gentry and respectable farmers of the surrounding neighbourhood. The Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch established here, which supplies the monetary requirements of the village. There are also two respectable inns, the Craigdarroch Arms and the George. Moniaive is a place of some antiquity, and formerly of more consequence than it is now, having been a burgh of barony, chartered in the reign of Charles I. It was in this district that several martyrs suffered at the time of the Reformation, and in this neighbourhood may be seen various testimonials to their memory. One very handsome monument, erected on an eminence near the village, bears the following inscription:—"In memory of the late Rev. James Renwick, the last who suffered death for attachment to the covenanted cause of Christ in Scotland. Born near this spot, 15th Feby., 1662, and executed at the Grass Market, Edinburgh, 17th Feby., 1688. Erected by subscription, 1828." Situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, which is here crossed by a bridge, is DUNREGGAN, now a suburb of Moniaive. The population of Moniaive, including Dunreggan, was in 1881, 676.

CLOSEBURN is a village and parish in the district of Nithsdale; it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about 10 miles in length by about 11½ in breadth, and contains about 29,102 acres. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of the late George Baird, Esq., and now in the hands of the trustees, form an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls. The most prominent architectural feature in the parish is the baronial mansion, Closeburn Hall, a large and splendid Grecian edifice. A school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish; it is placed under the government of the presbytery of Penpont. Mr. John Stevens, M.A., is the master. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. Near Closeburn Castle is a strong sulphurous spring, of the same character as Moffat Well. There is also another called Townscleugh Well, which is chalybeate. The population of the united parishes of Closeburn and Dalgarno in 1881 was 1,511.

CARRON BRIDGE, a village in the parishes of Morton and Durisdeer, stands on the river Carron, on the road from Sanquhar to Dumfries, a mile and three-quarters N.W. of Thornhill; it contains a school, built and supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, about 2 miles from the village.

PENPONT parish, containing 21,961 acres, gives name to a presbytery. It is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds; the latter description of land is found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about 2 miles S.W. from Thornhill. The church, contiguous to the village, and rebuilt in 1872, is a handsome edifice of sandstone, with clock, tower and spire. There are also places of worship for the Reformed and United Presbyterians. The Glenquhargen Craig, rising to a great height, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, &c. Population in 1881, 1,176.

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is 8 miles in length and 6 in breadth, with an acreage of about 19,717. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the seat of the Duke of Buccleuch; it was erected towards the close of the seventeenth century. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Adjoining the parish church is the sepulchral vault of the Drumlanrig Douglasses; over it is a magnificent marble monument and two sculptured figures in the Roubilliac taste, representing James, second Duke of Queensbury, and his Duchess; this monument was brought from Rome. Population in 1881, 1,107.

KEIR is a parish of about 7,860 acres, possessing a considerable quantity of plantation and limestone; it is bounded on the east by Closeburn, on the north west and north by Tynron and Penpont, and on the south by Dunscore; its length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 2½. One-half of the parish is arable, and the other half is divided into pasture, meadow and woodlands. Capenoch, the residence of Mrs. E. F. Gladstone, is situated in the parish. There is a church belonging to the Establishment, and two public schools. Population in 1881, 745.

TYNRON parish lies between Penpont on the north and north-east, and Glencairn on the south, and extends 9 miles in length, by a breadth of from 2 to 3, with an acreage of about 15,683. It is watered partially by the Shinnel rivulet, along the banks of which there is some pleasing scenery. Near the eastern extremity of the parish rises the Doon of Tynron, a conspicuous pyramidical hill, near the summit of which is an ancient castle. Population in 1881, 416.

EDINBURGHSHIRE.

THE County of EDINBURGH, or MID-LOTHIAN, lies in the southern division of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth (an arm of the German Ocean); by Linlithgowshire, or West-Lothian, on the west; by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk on the south; and by Haddingtonshire, or East-Lothian, with small portions of Berwickshire and Roxburghshire on the east. The length of the county, from east to west, is about thirty-six miles; and its breadth, from its extreme apex on the south, to near Musselburgh on the north, where the eastern extremity of the county abuts on Haddingtonshire, is about twenty-four miles. In figure, which is very irregular, it may be said to describe the segment of a circle, indented on its southern boundary by the counties of Berwick and Selkirk, and on its south-western verge by Lanarkshire. It contains about three hundred and sixty-seven square miles, or 234,926 acres. This county in size ranks as the twenty-second, and in population as the second.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In respect to the appellation "Edinburgh," all the information that can be obtained on the subject, from the obscurity of ages, is furnished in the description of the capital; while that of the "Lothian" will be given in the present article. In the first century of the christian era, this district of Scotland, according to best authorities (including the Messrs. Chambers, from whose valuable topography we have drawn largely), was inhabited by tribes of Ottadina and Gadeni, the British descendants of those enterprising foreign Celts who had first landed in the island. The Roman legions entered Edinburghshire about the year A.D. 80, when Agricola formed a chain of forts across the isthmus of land between the estuaries of the Clyde and Forth. We shall pass over the imperfect history of the wars of the natives and their irresistible enemies, the Romans, who finally secured the space they had at first marked down as their own. The skilful general who restored the Roman power was Theodosius, under the Emperor Valentinian I., who in compliment to his imperial master, entitled the extensive district he had thus conquered the province of Valentia, which this warlike people retained possession of for three hundred and sixty years. During their residence they reared altars, baths, granaries, and other works of art, still occasionally seen, and left those coins and weapons which from time to time are exposed in turning up the surface of the soil. The exigencies of the state at length required their presence nearer the capital, but it was with extreme regret that they abandoned their settlement. The date of their abdication is 446, and the epoch of the re-subversion of the Romanised Ottadini by Saxon invaders is only three years later. After a century of hard fighting, the superior genius of the Saxon Ida fixed this new race in those districts now comprehended in the shires of Berwick, part of Roxburgh, Haddington, Linlithgow, and a portion of Stirling. In the course of time this province obtained the distinctive appellation of Laodonie, Lothene, and more recently LOTHIAN. The origin of this title has occasioned much controversy, without arriving at a satisfactory conclusion upon its derivation. In common speech the district is to this day called Loudian or Loudon; thus the proper pronunciation is more correct, as regards etymology, than that which is in use among writers. Every foot of ground covered by the metropolis and its environs has been the scene of warlike strife, frequently involving the fate of the kingdom. In the struggle which Edward III. maintained for the restoration of the Baliol dynasty, one of the most sanguinary battles was fought on the Borough-moor of the metropolis. In 1385 Mid-Lothian was subjected to the horrors of pillage and conflagration, in the expedition of Richard II.; and a century and a half later, it suffered much from the invasion of the English, on account of the treaty of marriage between the son of Henry VIII. and the young Queen of Scots. The county was, soon after, the scene of many of the insurrectionary movements against the authority of Queen Mary, particularly that at Carberry Hill. Of the many interesting events connected with this county, the metropolis of it has been the nucleus; and our historical notice of Edinburgh, therefore, will present many details.

SURFACE, SOIL, AND CLIMATE.—The greater portion of the county is, if not mountainous, hilly, and in many places wild, and pastoral. The most prominent rising grounds are the Pentland Hills, and the following eminences, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—Moorfoot Hills, 1,850 feet; Caerkeiton (Pentland range), 1,555; Spittal Hill, 1,360; Arthur's Seat (from its base, 700), 796; House of Whim, 834; Woodhouselee, 729; Dalmahoy Hill, 680; summit of Braid Hills, 630; Penicuick, 586; Salisbury Crags, 550; Craig Lockhart Hill, 540; Battery of Edinburgh Castle, 510; Corstorphine Hill, 470; Calton Hill, 350; and Dalkeith, 200. It is ascertained that by the close of the eleventh century, agriculture had made some progress in the district of Mid-Lothian. During the last and present century much has been accomplished in this part in rearing plantations; but it is to the society of Improvers, formed at Edinburgh, about the year 1723, that this county is mainly indebted for its advancement in agriculture. In 1714 potatoes were first raised in fields, and in about thirty years afterwards their cultivation was completely established in the county. The agriculture of Mid-Lothian, now conducted in the best manner that science can suggest or capital render efficient, is vigorously prosecuted in the valleys of the rivers; the upland districts being unsuitable for agriculture, thus causing more attention to be devoted to sheep farming. Upon the whole it may be remarked, with regard to the soil of this county, and its management, that a very active spirit of improvement everywhere prevails; cultivation is rapidly ascending the hills, while the boggy grounds are gradually undergoing a process of drainage. The universally prevalent system of leases here, generally for nineteen years, gives the tenant farmers of Scotland an independence which tenants at will, or from year to year, cannot have, and enables them with confidence to expend money on the land. The CLIMATE is, upon the whole, salubrious, and not unfavourable to vegetation, its greatest drawback being its variability.

MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, AND COMMERCE.—The county abounds in several valuable minerals, especially coal, sandstone, limestone, and whinstone. In the western part is an extensive coal field, and the eastern contains inexhaustible and rich beds of this valuable mineral, extending from the shore at Musselburgh, on both sides of the North Esk, about fifteen miles inward, to the head of that stream at Carlops, on the confines of Tweeddale. In the parish of Calder are extensive beds of rich bituminous shale, from which paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted. Mid-Lothian possesses sandstone of different kinds, and of an excellent quality. The quarries of Edinburghshire have long enjoyed a pre-eminence which cannot be so effectually indicated by anything as by the appearance of the New Town of Edinburgh. The works of Craigleith and Hailes, near the city, may be justly considered objects of curiosity. Almost all the houses of the New Town, besides other buildings, have been reared from the former mine. There are several other quarries of inferior note throughout the county. Lead was, in former times, found at the head of the North Esk, on the south side of the Pentland Hills. A vein of copper is said to exist in the parish of Currie, but it has never been worked. The MANUFACTURES of Edinburghshire cannot be traced to a remote date, and have ever been remarkable for their extent. It is but little more than a century since that the fabrication of linen was known in the county. In Edinburgh, Leith, and Musselburgh there are now numerous manufactories of goods of different kinds, which will be found under their appropriate heads in the Directory of these places. The principal articles manufactured in the shire for exportation, either by out-ports or inland, besides Scotch linens, are glass, soap, salt, candles, refined sugar, ale, whisky, leather, bricks, tiles, pottery, iron, chemical preparations, printing ink and materials, paper, and books. The manufacture of paper became first known in Scotland in this county, and the district still possesses large establishments employed in the manufacture of this invaluable material, chiefly situated at Penicuick, and in the neighbourhood of Colinton and Lasswade. Paraffin oil has also become an important manufacture at Mid and West Calder. The maritime traffic of the county, which is very considerable, is concentrated at Leith, the only port suitable to the entrance of large vessels, and indeed the only one of any kind except those of Fisherrow, or Musselburgh, Newhaven, and the rising port of Granton. The Union canal, 31 miles in length, proceeding to the west from Edinburgh, conveys large quantities of coals and various kinds of goods to the city.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—This county does not possess any large rivers. This deficiency, however, is of little or no importance, in consequence of being placed on the margin of a broad and navigable frith. Next the Forth, the Esk may be said to be the chief river; it is composed of two streams, which unite their waters below Dalkeith, and glide into the Forth at Musselburgh. The Leith, a valuable small river, takes it rise on the north side of the Pentland Hills, and after receiving several rivulets, discharges its waters, after a course of nineteen miles, into the Forth. The Almond, the most westerly stream, rises in the high grounds on the boarders of Lanarkshire; it is joined by the Briech Burn, in its way to the Forth, which it enters at Cramond.—RAILWAYS.—The shire of Edinburgh is extensively interested in the system of railways, which radiate from Edinburgh. No town or considerable village in the county is now destitute of the advantages of railway communication.

CIVIL DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This district became subject to the government of a sheriff prior to the reign of David I. The office of sheriff of Edinburgh seems to have been at all times an appointment of great trust and dignity; and from the thirteenth to the eighteenth century was filled by the heads of families of note in the shire and its vicinity. The county, which is divided into 32 parishes, is now governed and its affairs conducted by the usual number of functionaries, distributed over six districts. Besides Edinburgh, the shire does not comprise any royal burghs, but possesses three of regality, namely, Musselburgh, Canongate, and Portsburgh and the town of Leith. Its only burgh of barony is Dalkeith. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery. The contributory burghs belonging to this county represented in Parliament are Leith, Musselburgh, and Portobello. The county at large sends one member to Parliament, its present representative being the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Up to the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, the city of Edinburgh returned two members, but was then separated into four divisions and given two additional representatives. The gentlemen at present sitting are:—East Division, Robert Wallace, Esq.; West Division, Thomas R. Buchanan, Esq.; Central Division, William M'Ewan, Esq.; South Division, the Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers. The parliamentary constituency of the county numbered in 1887-8, 18,019.

By the census returns presented to Government in 1871, the entire county contained a population of 153,892 males, and 174,487 females; total, 328,379; in 1881 the numbers were: males, 183,915; females, 205,249; total, 389,164; exhibiting an increase over 1871 of 60,785. The valuation for 1887-88 (exclusive of railways and waterworks) was £554,406; and of railways and waterworks (exclusive of portions within burghs), £119,680.

CALDER—MID, EAST, AND WEST.

MID-CALDER is a parish and village—the latter 12 miles W.S.W. from Edinburgh, and 8½ E. from Whitburn; pleasantly situated on the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, on an eminence between the water of Linnhouse, and the Almond; and Calder wood, which is of considerable extent, overhangs it. The minerals in this parish consist of various beds of rich bituminous shale, from which a large quantity of paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted at the different works. Coal abounds in the parish, and on the estate of Calder House, the property of Lord Torphichen, is an extensive bed of freestone, of excellent quality. The parish church is a fine specimen of Gothic achitecture, enlarged and restored at a cost of upwards of £3,000. It was originally founded by Duncan, Earl of Fife, in the early part of the thirteenth century, and was rebuilt on the original site by Peter Sandilands, a scion of the noble family of Torphichen, in 1541. A United Presbyterian church is the only other place of worship. To the west of the village is Calder House, the seat of Lord Torphichen, where the picture of John Knox is hung in the hall in which he first dispensed the sacrament of the Lord's supper after the Reformation. The house of Greenbank, in the vicinity, is celebrated as the birth-place of John Spottiswoode, Archbishop of St. Andrews. Fairs are held in this village on the second Tuesday in March, and Friday after second Tuesday in October. Acreage of the parish, 12,294. Population in 1881, 799; of the village, 657.

EAST CALDER is a small village, lying one mile E. from Mid-Calder, on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It was originally a parish of itself, but is now conjoined with Kirknewton. At the west end of the village are to be seen the ruins of the ancient parish church, built by Randolph de Clere, in the twelfth century, and dedicated to St. Cuthbert. A United Presbyterian church, of Gothic architecture, has been erected in the village at a cost of £2,000. There is also a Board school. Population in 1881, 734.

WEST CALDER is a village in the rather extensive parish of its name, the latter being about 10 miles in length and 5½ in breadth. The village is about 5 miles S.S.W. from Mid-Calder, and 16¼ S.W. from Edinburgh. It contains Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches and a Roman Catholic chapel. Until within the last twenty years no trade of any importance was carried on; but about that time Mr. James Young, the patentee of the paraffin oil, having purchased several large properties in the parish, which contains several beds of rich bituminous shale, erected one of the largest works in Great Britain for the manufacture of oil. In consequence of these operations the parish has more than quadrupled its population within the above period, and a new village has sprung up towards the west. In the immediate vicinage, at a place called Castle Craig, are the traces of a Roman encampment. In 1881 the entire parish, which has an area of 21,089 acres, had a population of 7,691 persons, and the village 2,291 of that number.

COLINTON,

BALERNO, CURRIE, HERMISTON, JUNIPER GREEN, KIRKNEWTON, AND SLATEFORD.

COLINTON, or Collington, is a village and parish, the latter lying at the base of the Pentland Hills, part of which it includes. The grounds rise beautifully from the vale of Corstorphine, and are finely cultivated, enclosed, and planted; the water of Leith passes through them, and its banks are here romantic and wooded. The church and manse of Colinton, standing in the midst of lovely scenery, are 4 miles S.W. of Edinburgh. Bonally Tower, the seat of the late Lord Cockburn, is in this parish, and is now the residence of Mrs. Hodgson. The manufacture of paper is carried on extensively, and the district abounds with limestone and freestone. On the lands of Coniston, which lie to the east, are vestiges of a very extensive encampment, near which is a rude massive block of whinstone, called "Camusstone," said to indicate the burial place of some Danish commander. On these lands the fountain for the Edinburgh water-cistern was first erected. Logan House Hill, in this parish is a considerable eminence, rising upwards of 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. SLATEFORD is a village in this parish. Acreage of the parish, 5,640. Population in 1881, 4,347.

The parish of CURRIE is bounded by Corstophine and Ratho on the north, Colinton on the west, and the Pentland Hills skirt it on the south. Through the low grounds run the water of Leith, and on its northern banks, 6 miles distant S.W. from Edinburgh, stands the village of CURRIE, through which the road to Lanark passes. The church is erected on a very commanding situation. The manufacture of paper and snuff prevails in this parish to some extent, the former particularly. On the estate of Maleny, beyond Currie, and rising above the banks of the Leith, is Lennox Tower, anciently the residence of the family of Lennox, as well as the occasional one of Mary Queen of Scots. At a short distance from it, on the opposite bank of the river are the ruins of another ancient edifice, once the mansion of the Skenes, of Currie hill. The parish also contains the house of Baberton, which is remarkable as having been used as a hunting seat by royalty at two distant periods—first by James VI. of Scotland, previous to his accession to the English throne, and secondly by Charles X. of France, after his expulsion from his dominions in 1830. Acreage, 11,103. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,390.

KIRKNEWTON, about nine miles S.W from Edinburgh, is a small village and parish; the latter, which includes the abrogated parochial division of Calder Clere, is bounded on the south and west by Mid-Calder, on the east by Currie and Ratho, and on the north by Slateford. In the burial ground of the church, which is about half a mile distant from the village, lie interred the remains of the celebrated Dr. William Cullen, who was proprietor of the estate of Ormistonhill, where he introduced, so early as the year 1758, an improved mode of culture. The river Almond, the water of Leith, and the great Glasgow road intersect the parish, which abounds with excellent limestone, and contains some fine seats and pleasure grounds; one of these is called Meadowbank, once the residence of a late senator of the College of Justice, entitled Lord Meadowbank, who was one of the chief improvers of this neighbourhood. Population of the village in 1881, 368.

BALERNO is a village in the parish of Currie, on the water of Leith, and situated about six miles S.W. from Edinburgh. There is a Board school in the village, also mills for the manufacture of paper. HERMISTON is a village in the above parish. Population in 1881, 474.

JUNIPER GREEN is a small village in the parish of Colinton, and about three miles S.S.W. of Edinburgh. Population in 1881, 1,018.

CORSTORPHINE AND GOGAR.

CORSTORPHINE is a village and parish, the latter, which commences about two miles to the west of Edinburgh, presenting on the whole, a remarkably level surface, the only eminences being its cognominal hills, not exceeding in altitude 470 feet above the level of the sea. The southern side of these hills is beautifully decorated with villas and well enclosed plantations. The whole of the parish consists of rich arable land, part of which is cultivated by agriculturists and market gardeners, and there are also many dairy farms. The village of Corstorphine is 3 miles W. from Edinburgh, on the high road to Glasgow, in a very pleasant situation; that of the church is particularly picturesque, and the building itself is interesting from its antiquity and associations. The church was not the original parish one, having been established in the year 1429, as a provostry or Collegiate church, which rose into importance, while the old parish church declined and finally fell into ruins. It was founded by Sir Adam Forrester, and endowments were supplied by himself and afterwards by his widow, their son, Sir John Forrester, also adding to the foundation. On the outer wall of the church the arms of the Forresters are found in several places, and the effigies of members of this family and their wives are carved in stone in life-size, and occupy niches in the chancel of the church. These and other memorials of a past age are still entire, and from their antiquity and variety must be considered eminently worthy of a visit. There are Established and Free churches, and also a Board school in the village, which also possesses a good subscription library of over 2,000 volumes, which proves of great benefit to the district. There is a station on the line of the North British Railway, about half a mile from the village. Acreage of the parish, 3,654. Population in 1881, 2,156, of which the village contained 952.

GOGAR, formerly an independent parish, is a pleasant hamlet in the parish of Corstorphine, situated on the banks of the Gogar burn, a tributary rivulet of the water of Leith, 5 miles S.W. from Edinburgh. Here stood a church previous to the Reformation, the interesting ruins of which still remain a source of attraction to the antiquary and tourist. There is a station on the line of the North British Railway, about three-quarters of a mile from the village.

CRAMOND,

DAVIDSON'S MAINS, BLACKHALL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRAMOND is a village and parish, the latter partly in the county of Edinburgh, and the remainder in Linlithgowshire, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth. The western part of it is intersected with the river Almond, which falls into the sea at a creek, on the east side of which, on a declining bank, lies the village of Cramond, known to have been an important Roman station. On the opposite bank of the Almond, on a craggy eminence, a fortification existed; and from this the name is derived—Car-Almond (changed to Cramond), signifying "the Castle on the Almond." A little below the village, on the sands, stake nets are fixed for the fishery here; and opposite to the mouth of the Almond, at a short distance from the shore, is Cramond Island, a very pretty little island rising with a gentle slope into a hill of moderate elevation. Part of it is cultivated. Within the parish are the village of CRAMOND BRIDGE, DAVIDSON'S MAINS, and the port of GRANTON, which latter will be found included with Edinburgh. Cramond Bridge is situated on the Almond river, which is here crossed by a very fine stone bridge, connected with the road from Edinburgh to South Queensferry, five miles from the city. There are considerable iron works established in this locality. The entire parish of Cramond contains an area of 5,277 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 3,004.

DALKEITH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF NEWBATTLE, NEWTON, AND MILLERHILL.

DALKEITH is a busy and populous market town, a burgh of barony, and a parish, six miles south from Edinburgh, and is a station on the Waverley line of the North British Railway. It occupies an exceedingly delightful and dry situation, in a fertile district, diversified with hill, dale, and wood, with the North and South Esk flowing round the place. It is the most important landward town in the county, and has been long celebrated for its weekly corn market, held on Thursday. Until a recent period this market was the largest in Scotland, but since the concentration of so many railways was effected in the capital, the Edinburgh grain market, has greatly exceeded in magnitude every other Scottish market. Until the year 1854, the weekly market was held in the open street, but since then it has been held in a covered building near the east end of the town. This market place is one of the finest and most commodious structures of the kind in Scotland, the large hall being 172 feet long, 50 feet wide and 45 feet high. It was erected at a cost of near £4,000. Prior to the formation of the Edinburgh and Hawick railway, the grain was all brought to the market in carts, which on market day during the busiest season of the year, lined all the streets of the town on both sides as closely as they could be ranged; but now the number on the street with grain is very insignificant, as only sample bags are sent to market; sales are made from these and the stock forwarded by rail to the buyer. On this account, the streets now present little difference in appearance between Thursday and other days of the week. The progressive increase of the banking establishments in Dalkeith may be considered as a fair exponent of its business importance. The Commercial Bank opened an agency here in 1810; the National Bank in 1825; the Royal Bank in 1836; and the Edinburgh and Leith afterwards; the Edinburgh and Glasgow in 1839, but which merged in the Clydesdale in 1858. In 1839 a National Security Savings Bank was established, which is well supported, and has proved a great boon to the humble and frugal portion of the community. There is also a well-conducted Penny Bank, equally useful in its more limited sphere. The district around Dalkeith abounds with coal, which is of excellent quality, and is worked to a great extent. The Mushet iron works afford employment to a large number of people, whilst Messrs. Stewart Brothers, of the Eskbank Carpet Works, give occupation to upwards of a hundred hands. These, together with its markets, may be mentioned among the chief sources of the town's characteristic animation and prosperity. There are, however, various other agencies which operate in the same direction, as Mr. Dawson's brush factory, Mr. Hope's brass works, Mr. Hurry's machine works, Messrs. A. & W. Douglas's corn mills, and also Messrs. M'Lennan and Urquhart's brewery, &c. Midlothian is famous for the excellence of its oatmeal, and Dalkeith mills have long been identified with the production of the best quality of this valuable and wholesome article of national food. It is proper to mention, too, that Dalkeith owes not a little to the activity and enterprise of its mercantile class, the amount of wholesale and retail business in grocery, ironmongery, and drapery establishments being probably greater than in any other Scottish town of similar size. The town has very much improved this last thirty years, and is being gradually extended with excellent houses and cottages, enclosed in neat gardens and luxurious shrubberies. The inhabitants suffered formerly from deficiency of water, but an ample supply, of excellent quality, has just (1888) been obtained within the burgh bounds by boring, the quantity thus secured being 65,000 gallons every 24 hours. The foundations of the commercial prosperity of Dalkeith were laid towards the beginning of the present century by the late Mr. John Gray, merchant; and the material advantages he bestowed have been worthily followed up in other departments of public and social progress and amelioration by its first provost, Mr. Alexander Mitchell, of whom, and of Mr. Gray, it may be said that they found Dalkeith "brick and left it marble."

The municipal management is vested in a board of twelve Commissioners, under the Police Improvement (Scotland) Act, who have the power to assess and regulate local taxes—such as the paving, lighting and water rates, &c. A sheriff's court is held in in the Masonic Hall, for cases under the Small Debt Act and Certain Debts Recovery Act, on the third Thursday of every month (September excepted), and a police court at the Police Barracks, on the second and fourth Saturdays of every month, and other days, as cases may require. There are thirteen places of public worship, namely two Established, one Episcopal, one Roman Catholic, three United Presbyterian, one Free, one Congregational, two Wesleyan, one Baptist, and one Evangelical Union, or Morisonian. There are three Board schools and several private ones. As indications of social and literary activity, it may be mentioned that the Scientific Association, which was formed in 1835, continues with undiminished spirit and success, and possesses a large and valuable library. The great impulse to pauperism in Scotland by the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1845 led here, as elsewhere, to the erection of a workhouse, in order to furnish a test of poverty, and provide a suitable refuge for the destitute and infirm. The Dalkeith Union Workhouse was the first of such houses in Scotland; it was opened in 1849 for the poor of four parishes, but there are now twelve parishes in combination. The cost of the building, which is capable of accommodating 120 inmates, was £4,058 18s. 10d., and this sum with the interest was paid off in ten yearly instalments. Dalkeith has been lighted with gas from almost the first introduction of that illuminating power. The company, which was formed in 1827, had a severe struggle for some years with expensive works and small returns, but ultimately all difficulties were overcome, and the town is now well supplied with cheap and excellent gas. In the neighbourhood are the mansions and grounds of Newbattle, Melville, and Dalhousie, belonging to the marquis of Lothian, Viscount Melville, and the Marquis of Dalhousie; whilst adjoining the town, and on the southern bank of the North Esk, stands Dalkeith House, the principal seat of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch. This building occupies the site of an ancient castle, which was long in the possession of the family of Douglas, and afterwards the frequent residence of the Regent Morton during the minority of James VI., when it was commonly and significantly called "the lion's den." The present edifice, which was built by the family of Scott about the close of the seventeenth century, consists of a body and two wings, with ornaments of the Corinthian order in front, and may be termed rather a good and substantial than an elegant house. The park contains about 800 Scottish, or 1,000 English acres, surrounded by a stone wall, adorned with much fine wood, and beautified by the winding of the two rivers Esk. The hall, the grand staircase, and the several suites of apartments within are spacious, elegantly furnished, and enriched by a valuable collection of paintings. His late Majesty George IV., on his visit to Scotland, sojourned at this mansion; and her present Majesty, Queen Victoria, has likewise repeatedly honoured it with her presence. Dalkeith gives the title of Earl to the eldest son of the Duke of Buccleuch. Fairs are held annually on the first Thursday after Rutherglen (in May) for horses, &c., on the third Tuesday in October for cattle, &c., last Thursday in February, first Thursday in April, and second Thursday in October for hiring. Population of the parish, the acreage of which is 2,344, in 1881, 7,707, and of the burgh, including Eskbank, 6,884.

MILLERHILL is the principal village in the parish of Newton, and is a station on the North British Railway. Population in 1881, 335.

NEWBATTLE is a parish and small village beautifully situated about a mile to the south of Dalkeith. It is watered by the South Esk, and abounds in valuable coal, which was excavated for their own use in pre-reformation times by its proprietors, the Monks. Besides its collieries, Newbattle possesses the important paper works of Messrs. R. Craig & Sons, who produce coloured paper of the very best quality and give employment to a great many hands. The site of the ancient Cistercian Abbey is occupied by the seat of the Marquis of Lothian, at present Secretary for Scotland, and it is surrounded by some of the oldest and largest trees in the kingdom, including a beech of extraordinary dimensions. The monastic buildings were ruthlessly removed when the present mansion was erected, and all that remains is part of the Gothic crypt, which was spared as it could be turned to account in the basement of the modern fabric. A few years ago the foundations of the old Abbey Church were accidently discovered and laid bare, and are left so throughout their entire extent. The building, said to have been very elegant, consisted of a long nave with bays and side aisles, choir and central tower, almost identical in measurement with the Abbey of Jedburgh, which also belongs to Lord Lothian. Like Dalkeith Palace, Newbattle Abbey contains a great number of valuable paintings, both ancient and modern. The present parish church is a plain comfortable building, with stained-glass windows. The amiable and pious Robert Leighton, afterwards Bishop of Dunblane, and Archbishop of Glasgow, was, when a Presbyterian, minister of Newbattle from 1641 to 1652, and the small pulpit he preached in has been in use by his successors from his time till the present day. A mural tablet has been recently erected in the church in memory of the good Archbishop. There is a well-attended parochial school, and at Newton Grange and Easthouses are handsome school premises, erected by the munificence of the Marquis of Lothian, in which the colliers' children of the district are instructed. Acreage, 5,225. Population in 1881, 3,346.

NEWTON is a parish of some considerable extent, contiguous to Dalkeith, having Lasswade and Liberton on the west and north, and Inveresk on the east. Coal is obtained abundantly within the parish, a large number of the inhabitants being employed in the mines. There is a handsome church belonging to the parish, and some useful schools, those for children of the colliers being well conducted, and have a beneficial tendency. Acreage, 2,032. Population in 1881, 1,307.

GOREBRIDGE,

TEMPLE, HERIOT, BORTHWICK, FUSHIE BRIDGE, STOBBS MILL, AND CARRINGTON.

GOREBRIDGE is a populous village in the parish of Temple, about 10 miles S.E. from Edinburgh and 4 S. from Dalkeith. It is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway. Sixty years ago there were only a few houses here; now, through the opening of extensive coalfields adjacent, and also the railway, it has become a place of importance. The places of worship in the village are the Free and an United Presbyterian church. A new Free church has been erected at a cost of about £1,400. Gorebridge is in the quoad sacra parish of Stobhill, where a new church has been built at a cost of £2,200. The parish church is at the village of Temple, about three miles distant. The shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. The first works for the manufacture of gunpowder in Scotland were established here. A library has recently been founded by Robert Dundas, Esq. of Arniston, for the use of the village and neighbourhood, and there is also a public hall belonging to the same gentleman. Population in 1881, 1,148.

TEMPLE parish, near the head of the South Esk, is bounded on the east by Borthwick, on the south by Heriot, on the west by Edleston and Penicuick, and on the north by Carrington. The village, which is about ten miles from Edinburgh, is situated on rising ground on the banks of the Gladhouse water, which falls into the South Esk, a short way below. It has an old Gothic church (now in ruins), founded by King David I. for Templars; the new church (also Gothic) was built in 1830. The parish, which is chiefly of a hilly nature, and containing much moorish and pasture land, and an area of 19,479 acres, had in 1881 a population of 1,551.

HERIOT parish is ten miles in length, six in breadth, and situate sixteen miles from the capital, and within the parish is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway. The surface of the land in this district is generally uneven; on the banks of the Gala and Heriot waters it is fertile. These two streams take their rise in the Muirfoot hills here, and afford fine sport to the angler. There are the remains of several ancient fortifications, most of them of a circular form, to be seen in the neighbourhood. The name of the parish imports the fine paid to the lord of the manor by a tenant. A fair is held at the head of Gala water on the first Friday after Whit Sunday for sheep and lambs. The parish encloses an area of 15,038 acres, with a population in 1881 of 429.

BORTHWICK parish lies about twelve miles from Edinburgh, on the Carlisle road. Near the church, which is beautifully situated on an eminence, are the ruins of Borthwick Castle, erected in 1496 by Lord Borthwick. These interesting remains, which are only two miles west from Crichton, are eminently worthy of being visited by the tourist. The parish has been the birthplace of several highly distinguished men, among whom may be enumerated Principal Robertson and Dundas of Arniston. Acreage of the parish, 9,806. Population in 1881, 1,741.

FUSHIE BRIDGE is a neat village, in the parish of and about one mile from Borthwick and five from Dalkeith. At this village is a station on the line above mentioned. About a mile to the north is the village of STOBBS MILL, lying partly in Borthwick parish and partly in that of Temple.

CARRINGTON is a small parish, lying in the southern part of the county, on the descending braes, which, at their summit, divide the district from the wilds of Peebles-shire. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated land, nine and a half miles south-east from Edinburgh, and consists of but a few houses and the kirk. Though not unfavourable to the growth of corn, the soil is more particularly adapted to that of the potato and green crops; coal is wrought in abundance, and there is also an indication of ironstone. Prior to the Reformation this parish had the valuable peculiarity of being a rectory independent of any monastery. The parish embraces an area of 4,403 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 606.

LASSWADE,

BONNYRIGG, LIBERTON, GILMERTON, GREENEND, LOANHEAD, ROSLIN, AND ROSEWELL.

LASSWADE is a small neat village and parish, the former six miles S. of Edinburgh and two S.W. from Dalkeith, delightfully situated on both sides of the North Esk, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge. With its handsome modern church crowning the height on the north bank of the stream,and its modest rural cottages below, embosomed in luxuriant gardens and umbrageous trees, it may be esteemed one of the prettiest and most picturesque villages in Scotland. Sir Walter Scott spent the first years of his married life in a neat cottage a little apart from the village. John Clerk, of Eldin, author of a famous work on naval subjects, and Lord Eldin, resided in Lasswade; and Thomas de Quincey, the author of the "Life of an Opium Eater," and many other works, lived in a cottage near Polton for some years. Within the last thirty years this place has been greatly improved by the erection of many substantial dwellings, and the opening of several manufacturing establishments; among the latter are four paper mills. The paper Mills, belonging to Messrs. Annandale & Son, Limited, are extensive works for making papers of various qualities. There are two other firms in Lasswade, and one in Polton engaged in the manufacture of paper. The North Esk runs through the whole length of the parish, and on its banks are presented a continuous succession of charming seats, in the most inviting situations, such as Melville Castle, Whitehill, Polton, to which Scott crossed to visit Constable, whom he called "the Napoleon of the printing trade," and Hawthornden—the latter remarkable for having belonged to Drummond, the poet and historian, and for the caves under it. These caves are three in number; the largest is twelve feet wide at the entrance,gradually tapering inwards; the height is six feet, and the length ninety; above there is a tunnel cut, for the admission of the light and air; in a recess there is a well, several fathoms deep. These caves are said to have afforded shelter to the Scots in turbulent times. At a little distance stand the ruin of Roslin castle; and adjacent is Roslin chapel, one of the most entire and beautiful pieces of Gothic architecture now remaining in Scotland. There are also traces of two other religious foundations in the village, St. Ann's and St. Leonard's. In the cemetery of Lasswade church are interred the remains of Drummond, the poet before mentioned; and an aisle of the old structure is appropriated as a burial vault for the noble family of Melville, and here lie the remains of the first viscount of that title whose prominent situation, during the ministry of Mr. Pitt, will still be recollected. The parish, which embraces an area of 10,678 acres, in 1881 hada population of 8,872, of which the village contained 1,232.

ROSEWELL is a rising village in the parish Lasswade, situated about four miles S.W. from Dalkeith, and two S.W. from Bonnyrigg. A neat church of the establishment, a public school, and a commodious hall are situated in the village. The Peebles Railway passes the village about half a mile distant, there being a junction at Hawthornden for Penicuick district. In the neighbourhood there is an abundance of coal, and the manufacture of fire-clay goods and mineral oils is carried on to a considerable extent. Gorton House, overlooking the Esk, wasa favourite residence of Christopher North. Population in 1881, 1,118.

The parish of LIBERTON includes three villages of its name—UPPER (or OVER) LIBERTON, LIBERTON KIRK, and NETHER LIBERTON, with GILMERTON and GREENEND—all of great antiquity,but none of them now of extensive importance. The kirk town is about three miles S. from the capital, and the like distance N.W. from Dalkeith and Lasswade. Gilmerton, the most considerable village in the parish, is situated about midway between Edinburgh and Dalkeith. There are two Free churches in the parish, and the original "Ragged" school, founded by the late Dr. Guthrie, has been removed to handsome and extensive premises near the parish church. There is a neat church or chapel of ease to Liberton in the village. The inhabitants are for the most part engaged in the adjacent collieries. Greenend village is about four miles N. from Lasswade, on the road to Edinburgh. The old church of Liberton, which was of Gothic architecture, survived till a recent date, when it was removed to make way for the present handsome semi-Gothic structure, whose square turrets and pinnacles can be seen at a great distance; an excellent manse is adjacent, and the village is contiguous. The parish, which lies at the base of the Pentland Hills, is exceedingly populous; and its mines of coal and its lime works are most extensive and valuable. The celebrated cave, dug by George Paterson, a blacksmith, out of the solid rock, was finished in 1724, after five years' hard labour. In this cave are several apartments with beds, a table with a large punch bowl, all formed from the same unmalleable material; there are also a smith's forge, a well, and a washing house. Here Paterson lived several years, and here he died about 1787. Craigmillar Castle, sometime a favourite residence of Queen Mary, stands on rising ground of moderate elevation, and commands a beautiful and extensive prospect over the surrounding country. By the extension of Edinburgh towards the south a large number of handsome villas have been erected in this neighbourhood, and the recently constructed Suburban railway, which encircles Edinburgh in its outskirts, has two stations in Liberton, and promises to add greatly to its population and manufactures. Large quarries of limestone are worked at Burdiehouse, and those of freestone and whinstone in various parts employ many persons. Liberton parish embraces an area of 6,617 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 6,026.

BONNYRIGG is a large and rising village in the parish of Cockpen, situated six miles S. from Edinburgh, and two S.W. from Dalkeith. There is a handsome Free church, also two large and commodious schools, with an attendance of about 250 pupils in each. In the village is a Town Hall, capable of holding about six hundred persons, a bowling green, which is largely frequented by the inhabitants and others, and a large public park; and in the neighbourhood is Dalhousie Castle, the grounds of which include those of the famous "Laird o' Cockpen," well known in Scottish song. There are two railway stations, viz:—Broomieknowe, on the Esk Valley Railway, and Bonnyrigg, on the Peebles Railway. Carpet weaving is carried on to a very considerable extent, many hands being employed in the manufacture of this very useful article; and in the immediate neighbourhood there are several coal mines. BROOMIEKNOWE, which is a part of the village, being in close proximity thereto, is resorted to by a large number of summer visitors. The Esk Valley, which is admired by all who visit it, can be seen from here to great advantage, and the view is open for miles around. Population in 1881, 2,164.

LOANHEAD is a large and rising village in the parish of Lasswade, one mile W. from that town, rather more than two S. from Liberton, and five S.E. from Edinburgh. It has recently been erected into a distinct parish, and has now a handsomely built established church, and the Free, the Reformed Presbyterian, and the Roman Catholic bodies have each a place of worship. The village contains many respectable houses, and in the neighbourhood several families of distinction are resident. A considerable proportion of the population is employed in the oil works and collieries, and some in the neighbouring paper mills. The inhabitants have the advantage of being well supplied with water, which is conveyed to their houses by pipes. A station on the Roslin and Glencorse line is situated here. Population in 1881, 2,493

ROSLIN is a small village and parish, the latter separated from Lasswade some years ago, and erected into a distinct parish of itself. Besides the Established church, there is a handsome Free church. The village is reached by a cross road leading southward from the line betwixt Peebles and Edinburgh, distant from Edinburgh seven miles s., from Lasswade two and a half s.w., and from Loanhead two miles in the same direction. It is much visited by tourists and parties from the metropolis, and, indeed, from all parts, both on account of the beauties of the scenery and of the ruins of Roslin Castle and its chapel. These stand south from the village, the former on the bank of the North Esk. The chapel is one of the most perfect specimens of Gothic architecture that time has spared in this part of the kingdom. These interesting relics, in connection with the lovliness of the district with which they are surrounded, form an attraction that invariably delights the visitor of cultivated taste and the admirer of the picturesque and beautiful. Agriculture is the prevailing occupation of the inhabitants of the parish; but there are the Roslin Gunpowder Mills and the extensive carpet works of Messrs. Henry Widnell & Co. Besides Roslin station on the branch line from Edinburgh to Glencorse, there are stations called Rosslyn Castle and Roslin Lee on the other side of the valley. Omnibuses ply during the summer from Edinburgh, and the walk by the valley of the Esk to Hawthornden is exceedingly picturesque. Population of the village in 1881, 613.

MUSSELBURGH is a town of great antiquity, ranking amongst the oldest in Scotland; it is a burgh of regality, represented in Parliament and the Convention of Royal Burghs; and possesses common good of an estimated value of upwards of £40,000. It occupies a level expanse upon the south shore of the Firth of Forth, 6 miles E. from Edinburgh. The river Esk intersects the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts, that on its eastern bank being locally designated Musselburgh, and that on its western Fisherrow. The former name is derived from extensive mussel beds which extended along the beach; the latter from a row of fishermen's houses, formerly styled Fish Raw. The site of Musselburgh is generally acknowledged to be that of an ancient sea level; hence the sub-soil is of sand and gravel. The situation is regarded as so favourable to health that a sanitorium was established here for the benefit of invalided soldiers during the wars with Napoleon I. Satisfied with the results, the Government desired to make the town a permanent military centre, and opened negotiations for the acquisition of a site whereon to erect cavalry barracks. The then authorities adopting a hostile attitude, the proposal was withdrawn, the Piershile site secured, and the entire military establishment here was abandoned.
